

Egyptian press renews attack on Netanyahu

CAIRO (AFP) — The Egyptian press on Saturday launched a fierce attack on Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, with one opposition newspaper calling Israelis "pigs and vampires".

"The insolence of Netanyahu reached new heights when he called the Palestinian people animals," said the opposition Al Wafd daily.

It accused the Israeli premier of "pointedly ignoring the massacres of hundreds of Palestinian children by Israelis and the carnage of Cana in South Lebanon, where more than 100 civilians died in April after Israel shelled a U.N. compound."

"Do not these Israeli vampires deserve to be treated like pigs?" the paper asked.

Al-Wafd said Mr. Netanyahu made the "animal" comments on Wednesday, but there were no reports of such remarks in the Israeli media.

However Mr. Netanyahu did react strongly to the drive-by shooting of two Jewish settlers by suspected Palestinian radicals.

The official Egyptian daily Al-Ahram took a more moderate tone, but accused Mr. Netanyahu of deliberately ruining relations with Egypt.

"Israel has started a premeditated policy consisting of burning its bridges, its confidence and its communication with Egypt," said the paper in an editorial entitled: "The illusions of Netanyahu."

"The goal of this campaign of lies is clear: it is aimed at pushing the Egyptians to pressure the Palestinians to accept Israeli conditions on Hebron," the paper said.

"Netanyahu is certainly capable of killing off the peace process, but he is incapable of reducing Egypt's role (in the process) or to stop it defending the rights of Palestinians," it added.

A second Al-Ahram editorial warned Israel that it would never achieve its goal of real security or "the respect of any peace accord as long as it thinks it can marginalise Egypt."

The government Al-Gumhuriya newspaper accused Mr. Netanyahu of being an "amateur" who "had launched himself into the peace process with the ideas of a man of war."

Egyptian-Israeli relations have become increasingly tense in recent months, with Israeli leaders repeatedly expressing concern at the violent attacks on Mr. Netanyahu and his hardline policies in the Egyptian press.

The row flared again this week, with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak on Wednesday angrily insisting that Egypt had to be "the cornerstone of the peace process," and daring Israel to "show us what they can do without Egypt."

But Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy on Thursday ruled out an active role for Egypt in Israeli-Palestinian negotiations on Israel's long-delayed withdrawal from the West Bank town of Hebron.

The Jewish state has also turned down a shuttle mission by Egyptian Foreign Minister Amr Musa between the Israelis and Palestinians aimed at bringing about a solution to the Hebron impasse.

U.S.-mediated negotiations aimed at forging a solution to Israel's withdrawal from most of Hebron, due to have taken place in March under 1995 autonomy accords, are currently locked in stalemate.

Sadeq Al Mahdi sees hope for non-violent change in Sudan

ASMARA (R) — Former Sudanese Prime Minister Sadeq Al Mahdi, who went into exile this week, said on Friday he still hoped for the non-violent removal of the Islamic government in Khartoum.

"I hope for a popular uprising, eventually with military support. But it could be possible, in the eleventh hour, to elbow this regime out without violence," Mr. Mahdi told Reuters.

"My departure is another chance to solve it peacefully — they (the government) will have to respond," he said in an interview in Asmara, Eritrea's capital.

Mr. Mahdi and his entourage arrived here by road on Wednesday after he decided to abandon his efforts to oppose President Omar Hassan Al-Bashir's government from inside Sudan.

Mr. Mahdi said he left his house in Khartoum last Monday after deciding on Dec. 5 to go into exile. He said the group travelled overland in five cars, taking 12 hours to reach the border with Eritrea.

General Bashir, who overthrew Mr. Mahdi's democratically elected government in a bloodless coup in 1989, says he is not frightened by Mr. Mahdi's decision to join the Eritrean-based Sudanese opposition.

The Sudanese news agency (SUNA) on Thursday quoted Gen. Bashir as saying Mr. Mahdi's "joining of the so-called opposition would not frighten the revolution and would not affect its adherence to its civilisational orientation (Islamic law)".

The National Democratic Alliance (NDA), an armed coalition that has started attacking Sudan, is based in Eritrea.

Largely Christian Eritrea has backed the NDA because it says Sudan's Islamic government is trying to destabilise the region.

Mahdi, great-grandson of the Sudanese Mr. Mahdi who rebelled against Egyptian imperialism in the 1880s, is a towering figure in Sudanese politics as head of the Umma, the largest party, and spiritual leader of the Ansar or Mahdist movement.

He told Reuters on Friday that Eritrea played no part in his flight and said he would soon leave Asmara.

"I will not stay. I will leave Eritrea for other places. First I will go to the neighbouring countries. Then Washington, London, Saudi Arabia, Jordan, and Egypt."

He said he will also hold talks with the Arab League, the Organisation of African Unity and the United Nations.

Asked if he thought the NDA, a coalition of about ten opposition groups of differing religious and political tendencies, could stay united if it took power, Mr. Mahdi said:

"The NDA's journey is up to the end of this regime. They are not talking about a Catholic marriage for life. They want to oust the regime, and bring peace. They will be legitimate up to the first general election. Then it is up to the people."

More killed as fighting continues in Mogadishu

MOGADISHU (AFP) — Three more people were killed and five wounded Saturday in fighting between clan militias in south Mogadishu, witnesses reported, bringing the death toll since the battles started on Thursday night to at least 21.

Heavy shelling started before dawn, residents said. Eleven of those killed Friday were civilians, some hit by stray rounds far from the fighting.

The fighting is pitting the militiamen of Musse Sudi Yalahow, who holds the enclave of Medina, and those of Osman Hassan Ali "Ato," who holds another section of south Mogadishu against the militiamen of warlord Hussein Mohamed Aided.

It was in Medina that Aided's father, General Mohammed Farah Aided, was fatally wounded in a battle on July 24. He died on August 1.

An Aided militia commander told AFP that his men had captured an armoured personnel carrier from Mr. Yalahow's men. The Italian-made vehicle had been captured from government forces in Somalia's civil war which led to the overthrow of dictator Mohammad Siad Barre in 1991, and kept hidden from U.S. and U.N. troops who arrived here to help famine victims but became embroiled in the clan wars.

Mr. Yalahow told journalists Friday that his men had captured a "technical" pick-up truck with an anti-aircraft gun mounted on the tray.

He said then that seven of his militiamen had been killed, but neither the Osman Ato or the Aided faction have given their casualty figures.

The militiamen were using artillery guns, recoilless rifles, rocket-propelled grenades and heavy machine-guns.

NEWS IN BRIEF

U.N. to close refugee camp in north Iraq

ANKARA (AFP) — The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) will soon close a camp in northern Iraq for Kurdish refugees who fled fighting in Turkey between separatist rebels and government forces, officials said Saturday. Turkey has insisted since early 1995 that the Atrush camp be closed, saying it has become a base for Kurdish Labour Party (PKK) forces, which are fighting for a Kurdish homeland in southeastern Turkey. After a series of talks with the Turkish government, the UNHCR agreed to close the camp, and its occupants will begin leaving within 10 days, the officials said. The Atrush camp, more than 150 kilometres from the Turkish-Iraqi border, shelters about 14,000 Kurdish refugees from Turkey who fled the fighting in southeastern Turkey at the end of 1994. Turkey attributed the refugees' displacement to "PKK pressure." The United Nations put the refugees in the Atrush camp during a general Turkish military offensive against the PKK in March 1995 in northern Iraq. Ankara recently announced it has provided the United Nations with assurances it sought on the refugees' return to Turkey and their security. The returning refugees will be housed by the Turkish red Crescent near Silopi, about 110 kilometres from the border with Iraq, the officials added.

Cyprus planning to buy Russian missiles

NICOSIA (AFP) — The Greek-Cypriot government in Cyprus is negotiating with Russia to buy S-300 ground-to-air missiles, despite strong warnings from Ankara. Yannis Cassoulides, spokesman for the Greek-Cypriot administration in Nicosia, told state radio late Friday that Cyprus was "negotiating the purchase of S-300 missiles from Russia," but he gave no further details. "Cyprus is an independent state and can decide all matters related to its defence," added Mr. Cassoulides. Turkish Foreign Minister Tansu Ciller is preparing to fly to Moscow next week for talks aimed at persuading Russia to back out of the deal, said the radio. Turkey on Tuesday warned the Cypriot government against "arming heavily," saying it would not allow increased threats against the Turkish Cypriots.

Convicted murderer beheaded in S. Arabia

JEDDAH (AP) — A man convicted of fatally stabbing his wife was beheaded Saturday in southern Saudi Arabia, the 67th execution this year under the kingdom's strict Islamic laws. An Interior Ministry statement said that Jaber Ben Ali Issari was executed in the town of Mahall, in the southern Asir province, after he was found guilty of murdering his wife. The Arabic-language statement did not give Issari's nationality or provide any other details. A record 192 people were beheaded last year in Saudi Arabia.

Khamenei warns U.S. against attacking Iran

TEHRAN (AFP) — Iran's spiritual leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei on Saturday warned that his country would respond forcefully to any attack on it by the United States.

"Foreigners must not think they can foster insecurity in Iran, and at the same time maintain security in the region," said Ayatollah Khamenei in a speech to commanders of the Pasdaran, or guards of the revolution.

"If the satans do something like this, the people of Iran will not let the source of the blows escape without a reply," he said, in an allusion to the United States, which is always referred to as satan in official terminology.

Ayatollah Khamenei, whose speech was carried on state radio, added that "everything shows that the American government is thinking of planning a blow against Iran, but it should have learned its lesson from past failure and now know the Iranian people."

"The day when Iran has its security is the day when the Persian Gulf region will also have its security," he added.

The Los Angeles Times reported earlier this week that U.S. officials were considering retaliating against Iran if they accept the Saudi theory that Saudi Shiites were responsible for the June 25 truck bombing in Dhahran that killed 19 air force personnel.

The Washington Post said Wednesday that Saudi Arabia has given the U.S. government evidence that the bombing in Dhahran, in eastern Saudi Arabia, was carried out by Saudi Shiite extremists trained and backed by Iran.

However, the report was played down by the White House which said the investigation into the bombing had not reached any conclusions.

Iran on Thursday denied involvement in the Saudi bombing.

"We reject in the strongest terms this new campaign against Iran which is aimed at manipulating American public opinion," Iran's mission at the United Nations in New York said, in a statement carried by the official news agency IRNA.

Iran plans football tournament on Abu Musa

DUBAI (R) — Iran said Saturday it plans to organise a football tournament on the Gulf island of Abu Musa, which is at the centre of a dispute with neighbouring United Arab Emirates (UAE) since 1992. Iran's state-run news agency IRNA reported.

IRNA, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC), quoted the island's governor, Hasan Riza'i, as saying that the choice of Abu Musa for the second year running was for its "favourable climate."

The agency did not give more details, but sources familiar with Iran's soccer competitions said only local teams from neighbouring towns will participate.

Gulf Arab leaders earlier this week called on Iran to end its "occupation" of the three Gulf islands of Abu Musa, Greater Tunb and Lesser Tunb, claimed by the UAE. Iran says its sovereignty over the islands is not negotiable.

Bahrain security court adjourns trial of Qataris

MANAMA (Agencies) — The state security court on Saturday adjourned until Wednesday the case of a Qatari man and woman accused of spying for their country.

The trial of the two has worsened already strained relations between Bahrain and Qatar. The two small Arab Gulf states have been locked in a territorial dispute over a chain of islands and a strip of land.

The special tribunal that opened Dec. 4 has been closed to the press. A government source said the three-judge court will meet again on Wednesday.

All documents requested by the defence should be presented at the next session, the source said, speaking on condition of anonymity. He declined to provide any information about Saturday's proceedings.

Fahd Hamad Abdullah Al Bakker, 28, and Salwa Jassim Mohammad Fakhr, 33, could face the death sentence if convicted.

Bahrain officials have said the two confessed to an investigating judge before the trial that they collected information about Bahrain's military and its two-year state of civil unrest.

Qatar denies its any spying was conducted on behalf of the Qatar government. It has warned Qataris to be cautious when visiting Bahrain.

In a recent interview with Bahrain's state-run television, Mr. Bakker identified himself as an agent for the qatari intelligence and asked Bahrain's emir, Sheikh Isa Ben Salman Al Khalifa, for forgiveness. His lawyer, Abdullah Fakhr, told the Associated Press when the trial opened that the information involved in the case was common knowledge and did not amount to military secrets.

The defendants are accused of gathering intelligence for the Qatari government and accepting money from Doha to undermine Bahrain's security. The penalty for spying is either execution or a long prison term.

Last week Qatar accused Bahrain of torturing Mr. Bakker and said the trial "set a dangerous precedent in Gulf ties."

Bahrain has denied Qatar's accusation.

The charges have raised tensions between Bahrain and Qatar, already at loggerheads over a cluster of small islands in the Gulf controlled by Bahrain since the 1930s but also claimed by Qatar.

Prince meets with American tour operators

AMMAN (J.T.) — HRH Prince Faisal Bin Al Hussein Saturday met with a group of visiting American tour operators and stated that the Kingdom is modernising and upgrading services for tourists as well as building new facilities in preparation for large groups of visitors.

The Prince described Jordan as a home for different cultures throughout historical eras and further stated that the Kingdom holds unique attractions for tourists interested in such historical sites as well as those seeking curative services.

He said that since the conclusion of the 1994 Jordan-Israel peace treaty, the Kingdom has witnessed an increase in its tourism industry with large groups coming here from all parts of the world thus prompting the government to increase services offered to such visitors.

According to the Ministry of Tourism, last year Jordan was visited by more than a million tourists, bringing $700 million in revenues to the Kingdom.

But Minister of Tourism and Antiquities Saleh Al-Jarrah recently affirmed that tourism in Jordan and the whole region has been on the decline for the past months due to the political developments in Palestine, Lebanon and the Gulf region.

Prince Faisal told the tour operators that Jordan has been linking tourism with development projects benefiting the local communities, citing as an example the development plans for the Bani Hamida tribe near Madaba, south of Amman to train local women and that they now produce handicrafts, many of which are sold to visitors to Jordan.

The Jordan News Agency, Petra, said that several American tourist organisations are currently involved in the preparation of programmes designed to increase the volume of groups visiting the Middle East as well as to organise groups visiting from the United States.

RJ debates global market challenges

AMMAN (Petra) — Royal Jordanian (RJ) Saturday opened a workshop to discuss air transport industry challenges before an annual airline's sales officers meeting on Monday.

RJ's Vice President for Marketing and Sales Majdi Sahri opened the two-day workshop which, he said, will discuss ways of dealing with challenges in global markets, competition issues, tallying operational spending and improving performance.

He said that workshop participants will debate dilemmas facing the air transport industry and propose solutions.

Following Monday's meeting, which will be held at the Amman Marriott Hotel, Royal Jordanian President and Chief Executive Officer Nader Dalabi will address a press conference to discuss the airline's projections for the coming year, according to an RJ statement.

Dr. Sahri described the workshop and the subsequent Monday meeting as designated to discuss the economics of chartered flights, pricing strategies and a general plan for the sales office.

The workshop, he added, will be addressed by a British expert on air transport.

65 women prepare for elections in British-sponsored workshop

By Francesca Ciriaci
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — With only a couple of months before the next local elections and less than one year to go for the general elections, Jordanian women are getting ready to face their constituencies with determination and proficiency and gain a more effective role in politics and decision-making.

With training provided by three prominent experts on election campaign management from the United Kingdom (U.K.), more than 65 women, five from each of Jordan's 12 governorates, are going to specialise in how to deal with all aspects of a campaign as candidates, candidate aides and press officers.

Jordanian women have made great strides in all fields of life, but they still need further training in order to enhance their role in the political arena, said HRH Princess Basma on Saturday, during the opening ceremony of a five-day workshop dedicated to women in politics and entitled "Preparing Campaign Teams."

The workshop, organised by the Jordanian National Forum for Women (JNF) in cooperation with the British embassy and the British Council in Amman, will not only provide potential candidates with the valuable opportunity of sharing the experience of professional campaign managers, but it will also help women enhance their role through training, discussions, and actual participation.

Princess Basma said. Underlining the importance of training in election campaigns and the procedures and approaches practised in this regard, Princess Basma, who chairs the JNF, pointed out that women have proved their efficiency and active presence in the last municipal elections.

In fact, though only one woman holds a seat in the current Parliament,

10 women, out of 12 women candidates, were elected in the July 1995 municipal elections, including one as a mayor.

The training team at the workshop is formed by Leslie Abdela, winner of the 1996 U.K. Woman of Europe Award, journalist and broadcaster as well as consultant and advisor on women's development issues, Candy Piercy, federal campaigns, elections and press officer with the British Liberal Democrats, and Jackie Ballard, Council support officer for the Association of Liberal Democrat Councillors and prospective parliamentary candidate in the U.K.

Introducing the main goals of the workshop, Ms. Abdela, who has conducted election campaign training courses in four continents, said "we are not talking about excluding men, but simply about including women...because when men and women work together we can achieve progress with stability."

The fact that four men are taking part in the seminar in support of women's access to the political life, "stems from the strong belief of the complementarity of both men and women who share in building the society through coordinated efforts and balanced roles," Princess Basma noted.

Addressing the opening session, Director of the British Council David Burton and British Ambassador in Amman Peter Hinchcliffe praised Jordan for having taken "the lead among the Arab countries in promoting and supporting the role of women."

"Including more women in politics and decision making is both an essential point of the Beijing Conference platform and the national plan," Mr. Hinchcliffe told participants. The Beijing conference was sponsored by the United Nations in the fall of 1995 to focus on a multitude of issues related to the status of women from around the world.

The busy schedule of the five-day workshop, held at Princess Basma Women Resources Centre, includes voter surveys to be carried out by participants, sharing of real life experiences and practice press conferences as well as lectures on how to handle the press, prepare press releases and speak on radio or television programs.

Elections have provided women with new prospects to upgrade their status and enhance their role and participation not only in Parliament, but also in the local councils, professional associations, non-governmental associations and private firms, stated JNF head Farah Daghestani.

Stressing the need for women to acquire the skills necessary for the management and implementation of election campaigns, Ms. Daghestani concluded with a strong appeal to Jordanian women to participate actively in the coming parliamentary elections.

Firefighters in the process of putting out blaze Friday night in which a section of the Jordanian Corporation for Manufacturing Cardboard was destroyed (CDD photo)

Fire burns section of factory in Sahab estate

By Rana Hussein
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — A huge fire ripped through part of a cardboard factory at Sahab Industrial City in east Amman late Friday night, causing extensive damage to the contents of the factory but no injuries, according to Civil Defence Department (CDD) reports.

A CDD official said it was too early to determine the cause of the blaze which occurred at 10 p.m. and destroyed a section of the Jordanian Corporation for Manufacturing Cardboard.

The blaze destroyed the entire stock of raw material stored in a compartment of the factory, which included newspapers and magazines recycled to produce egg trays, a CDD official said.

Eight CDD fire engines participated in extinguishing the flame in less than half an hour, the official stated.

CDD officials could not give an immediate estimate of losses caused by the fire but said that an investigative committee was formed to look into the cause.

Minister of Interior Awad Khleifat and CDD General Director Major General

Theeb Ma'ani supervised the rescue operation, a CDD statement said.

This is the second fire to occur in a factory in Sahab over a two-month period.

On Oct. 18, fire gutted a textile factory causing destruction to the entire plant and losses amounted to more than JD 1.5 million.

A CDD official contacted by the Jordan Times Saturday said that the cause of the textile factory fire, which occurred 50 days ago, was still undetermined and that an investigative committee was examining the incident.

AMMAN — Every morning, Khaled goes somewhere special to learn new skills, but for those who come behind him, the future could be less certain.

Coming from an indigent family and suffering from a mental disability since childhood, Khaled, now 23, has been a regular student along with more than 150 other students at the Centre for Special Education (CSE).

Today, after more than 15 years at the CSE, Khaled excels in woodwork and has taken up his role as a productive member of society.

The centre is among tens of special institutions that cater to the mentally disabled, but finding the funds to keep such an endeavour alive is proving difficult.

On the positive side, the emergence of such centres reflects the growing awareness in the Kingdom of the need to help the disabled integrate into the community.

The Centre for Special Education was established in 1974 by the Young Muslim Women's Association (YMWA), a non-profit voluntary organisation opened in 1972. The YMWA is chaired by HRH Princess Sarvath Al Hassan.

"Disabled people are human beings, with feelings and abilities, less than the normal person but still enough to be productive and obtain roles in the community," CSP Director Ghassoon Al Karch said.

"The community has to focus on those abilities and offer a chance to the disabled to live a dignified and productive life," she told the Jordan Times.

The centre started with 18 students; in 1981, designated as "The Year of the Disabled," the number rose to 80 students. CSP now serves 154 students.

It offers comprehensive services to children in three stages: the pre-school section, the primary school and the pre-vocational section (which trains students 16 years-old and over in horticulture, window-washing, domestic science, wood-working, weaving and ceramics), Ms. Karch said.

The success of the pre-vocational section led to the establishment of the so-called Sheltered Workshops in 1987, designed to provide employment for graduates of all institutions for the disabled.

A total of 112 graduates of the Centre for Special Education, which employs 32 teachers, are now employed in their craft through the workshop, Ms. Karch said.

But, last May, the assembly section in the shelter was shut down because of lack of funds, she said.

"After 22 years of hard work, we had to shut down this section, eliminating more chances for graduates of such institutions to find work," Ms. Karch said.

More than 65 per cent of the students' families are unable to pay their fees, and the centre depends on donations, subsidised tuition fees, a teacher said.

The government is "very generous with donations," but individual donors are not helping those associations enough, Ms. Karch said, stating that Arab societies in general still do not fully appreciate the abilities of the disabled and the roles they can play.

The centre needs JD 200,000 a year to continue functioning and expanding its programmes, but it is receiving much less than that and is forced to cut down on some services, Ms. Karch stated.

The CSP curriculum emphasises developing self-awareness, the acquisition of practical skills, social interaction and adaptation to the environment which is achieved through encouraging a friendly atmosphere, a teacher said.

Parental involvement is crucial to ensure the success of the training, and therefore the centre offers open Mondays during which parents can attend classes with their children. CSP teachers told the Jordan Times.

The centre also works to upgrade the skills of staff members by sending them to special training courses and observation programmes abroad, Ms. Karch said. Foreign volunteers also come to Jordan to help in this area annually, she added.

But teachers at the centre say they are underpaid although their salaries are 15 per cent higher than average teachers. "The efforts we give are much higher than the efforts teachers give in ordinary schools," one teacher said, and others concurred.

According to Ms. Karch, the centre plans to improve its services in the future to accommodate larger numbers of students, enrich its training programmes and raise the standards of education. But to achieve these goals, Ms. Karch said, all centres for the disabled require more funds.

Ms. Karch also said that legislation must be amended to give the disabled more opportunities in society.

She said that even though the law gives rights to the disabled much more is needed in order to ensure equality among members of society.

"We call on all individual and community donors to help, however little, because the little you give, means a lot to us," Ms. Karch said.

Jordanian-Tunisian committee to meet tomorrow

By Sacha Baggili
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — The second session of the Joint Jordanian-Tunisian Higher Committee will convene here Monday to discuss bilateral relations as well as pan-Arab and international issues of common interest.

The committee, which last met in Tunis in April 1995 and which concluded agreements for cooperation in trade, economic, scientific and technical fields, will be headed by the Tunisian Premier Hamed Qarawi and Jordanian Prime Minister Abdul Karim Kabariti. The Tunisian delegation to arrive in Amman with Dr. Qarawi today, includes Minister of Transport Sadeq Rabeh, Saeed Ben Mustafa from the foreign ministry and a team of experts and entrepreneurs.

The joint committee aims to encourage businesspersons and exporters in both countries to "double their efforts and make use of the positive atmosphere provided for them by the trust and cooperation which exist between the leaders of Jordan and Tunisia," Ahd Razaq Shouari, press spokesman to the Tunisian embassy, told the Jordan Times.

"We are all confident that the results of this second round will enforce the bilateral relations of the two countries to fulfill the wishes of both King Hussein and President Zein Al-Ahideen Ben Ali," he added.

Discussions during the three-day meeting will also address issues related to the Middle East peace process as well as Jordanian and Tunisian relations with the European Union.

Salt murder to end in execution

By Rana Hussein
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — A 30-year-old man, convicted of robbing, killing and mutilating a man in Salt in August last year, is scheduled to be executed today in Swaga prison at dawn, raising the number of national executions to 10 this year.

On Thursday, 22-year-old Mohammad Na'el Darwish Majdalawi, convicted of molesting and strangling a nine-year-old boy in Ghor Safi, was put to death at the same prison.

Kayed Ahmad Khreisat was sentenced to death by the Amman Criminal Court on July 25, after he was found guilty of killing Muhammad Ensour, 32, in his house in Salt on Aug. 14.

According to court documents, Mr. Khreisat claimed to have been helping Mr. Ensour obtain a taxi licence but actually defrauded him of JD 700 and "wanted to get rid of him because [Mr. Ensour] kept asking for his money."

On the morning of Aug. 14, Mr. Khreisat asked Mr. Ensour to meet him at his house to finish the necessary papers.

Mr. Khreisat then jumped at Mr. Ensour, strangled him with a rope, stole JD 2,000 and some documents, court transcripts said.

In his confession in March, Mr. Khreisat told the court that he did not intend to kill Mr. Ensour, but only strangled him to discontinue a brawl which had erupted between them, adding that he wrapped a rope around the man's neck to restrain him. "But he fell suddenly and I tried to wake him using cologne and onions but he did not wake up and I was frightened as he died in my house, so the only solution way to cut him up into pieces," Mr. Khreisat told the court.

Court transcripts said that Mr. Khreisat borrowed a saw from his neighbour, cut Mr. Ensour's body into pieces, placed it in boxes and dumped it in several areas around Salt.

A royal decree was issued last month, approving of the Court of Cassation's ratification to execute Mr. Khreisat in October.

Last year, eight people were put to death in the Kingdom for various crimes.

Zaire force starts closing down

KAMPALA (R) — Canadian units making up a multinational force for eastern Zaire started closing down operations Saturday after the United Nations ordered them to pull out.

The 350-strong Canadian contingent in Uganda and Rwanda swiftly prepared to pull out and end their central Africa mission, which never really got off the ground.

"The operation is closing down fast," said Canadian military spokesman navy Lieutenant Charles Brown in its Kampala headquarters. "The command and control function is shutting down branch by branch."

He said the first Canadian personnel would leave by plane from Entebbe Airport, Uganda, Monday, some more Wednesday and the last would be out of the region by the end of December.

"A decision was taken in New York formally closing out the mission... We are pulling out of Kigali in the next few days," said Major Rob Babiuk, a Canadian spokesman in Kigali.

"We received word this morning from New York and are packing up," said Maj. Babiuk. "We have 19 people here and everyone will be gone by noon tomorrow except for four of U.S. to tie things up."

The Canadian liaison team arrived in Rwanda on Nov. 17 when the international community was pushing for a multinational force to intervene in eastern Zaire to help aid Rwandan refugees fleeing after a revolt by Zairean rebels.

U.N. special envoy for the Great Lakes region of Africa, Raymond Chretien, said Thursday that the need for a multinational military force had greatly diminished.

He said the Security Council authorised the establishment of the force in mid-November before hundreds of thousands of Rwandan refugees trekked home to Rwanda from Zaire and before it was clear humanitarian organisations could have access to them.

But the European Parliament lashed out Thursday at the international community's delay in sending troops to Zaire to get aid to refugees and urged leaders urgently to discuss the issue.

The Canadians first arrived at Entebbe on Nov. 14 and the force set up its headquarters in Kampala.

Only Canada contributed troops and equipment to the multinational force. The United States, Britain, Italy, Holland, Belgium and South Africa sent liaison officers but did not join.

The force, under the command of Lieutenant-General Maurice Baril, was unable to do much more than coordinate data from aerial searches for refugees and prepare plans for aid airdrops.

"General Baril will come down to Kigali early next week to pay a courtesy call on the government and then we will be out of Rwanda entirely," Maj. Babiuk said. He said the force's activities, except for packing up and preparing to pull out, had ceased with the New York decision.

The force flew cholera kits and tarpaulins to Tanzania and water bladders, aid supplies, medical kits and communications equipment to Kigali for aid agencies.

It also sent a few officers to rebel-held eastern Zaire to help the U.N. refugee agency track refugee movements. Rwanda however refused to allow the force to be based in Kigali because the Rwandan government held most refugees had returned home.

Meanwhile, hundreds of thousands of Rwandan refugees streamed through northwest Tanzania towards the Rwandan border Saturday at the start of a mass repatriation, the U.N. refugee agency said.

"They are marching from Nyakuhura onwards. They are all marching," said Judith Melby, a spokeswoman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), adding the refugees were headed for the Rwandan border.

Nyakuhura is 90 kilometres southeast of Benaco Camp, which is 17 kilometres from the Rwandan border and the largest Rwandan refugee camp in Tanzania. The refugees on the move were from other camps in the area.

"If you look at Rwanda, look at Zaire, you need something to unlock the jam. This (mass movement) is it," Ms. Melby added. Other aid workers confirmed a massive movement towards the border.

The exodus followed talks between camp leaders in Benaco and officials of the Tanzanian government, which says all 540,000 Rwandan Hutu refugees in Tanzania must leave by Dec. 31.

Troops earlier sealed off the refugee camps to push Rwandan refugees to go home and barred journalists and UNHCR officials from the area of the camps.

Aid workers said they feared this block was placed to stop people witnessing any violence during the repatriation of the refugees.

But the U.N. World Food Programme (WFP) earlier reported that more than 100,000 Rwandan refugees were trekking southeast — away from Rwanda — deeper into Tanzania in a column 20 kilometres long, one day after Tanzanian forces turned back hundreds of thousands.

"The column is some 20 kilometres long so we estimate it is probably more than 100,000 people. They have encountered some Tanzanian checkpoints and were urged to turn back but have not so far done so," said WFP spokeswoman Michelle Quintaglio.

She said the column was apparently made up of people fleeing Kitali and Keza camps and forests.

Muslim militants clash with police in Pakistan

About 250 activists of the Sunni Tehrik (Movement) launched their action in a commercial district to protest at a member of the Ahmadi religious sect being included in the Sind provincial government.

Sunni Tehrik and other militant Muslim factions regard the Ahmadi as heretical.

The protesters prayed in the road and then tried to march on the Sind chief minister's house to stage a sit-in, but were forced back by police.

Angry young activists threw stones at the police and smashed about a dozen cars parked nearby. No one was injured.

Sunni Tehrik and other militant Muslim factions were angered by the inclusion of Kanwar Idris as interrior and town planning minister in the caretaker provincial cabinet.

Mr. Idris belongs to the Ahmadi community, officially declared to be outside the pale of Islam by parliament in 1974. In 1984 a decree banned Ahmadis from using Islamic forms of worship or describing their places of worship as mosques.

Taleban militia seize Stinger, cache of buried ex-government weapons

KABUL (AFP) — Afghanistan's Taleban militia has seized an American-made Stinger anti-aircraft missile and a large cache of former government weapons that had been buried underground. Kabul officials said Saturday.

Officials at the Taleban-controlled Radio Shariat told AFP that the shoulder-fired missile was captured Friday at Qargah Centre west of Kabul.

The U.S. government gave Stingers to the Mujaheddin during the latter years of their 1979-89 Jihad (holy war) against occupying Soviet forces to counter Soviet airpower.

During the presidency of Burhanuddin Rabbani, who fled north when the Taleban took Kabul on Sept. 27, a black market for Stingers grew from unconfirmed reports that the United States would buy back unused missiles for $100,000 each.

Radio Shariat also reported the capture of a large cache of munitions last Thursday from the house of Mr. Rabbani's former minister of water and power, in a village north of Kabul.

"This was a vast quantity of arms — enough to fill 10 truckloads," said a radio official.

The arms cache was reported to have been buried underground and protected by a belt of anti-personnel mines, which had to be cleared.

The assorted cache contained AK-47 assault rifles, anti-aircraft heavy machineguns, recoilless rifles and anti-personnel mines.

Telephone communications equipment was also unearthed in the haul. Excavation was still continuing in the area, the official said.

These cache was located well behind the frontlines where the fundamentalist militia is battling a coalition of anti-Taleban alliance.

China sentences dissidents to hard labour

BEIJING (R) — China has sentenced two veteran democracy activists to hard labour for up to three years, a fellow dissident said Saturday.

Authorities in Taiyuan in central China's Shanxi province sentenced Fu Guo-yang to three years of reeducation through labour, the dissident told Reuters by telephone.

Fellow activist Chen Ping, who had worked with Mr. Fu on pro-democracy tracts, had been sentenced to one year of labour reform, said the dissident who asked not to be identified.

"The reason was because they published articles abroad about democracy," said the dissident. "They just wrote some articles. There really was no reason for this."

Authorities had branded the essays counter-revolutionary, said a statement by the Information Centre of Human Rights and Democratic Movement in China.

Taiyuan Police detained Mr. Fu, 29, in late July for what they said were illegal political activities.

Mr. Chen, 45, had been arrested in Taiyuan in August and was sentenced together with Mr. Fu, the source said, adding he did not know when the sentences had been passed.

Police in Taiyuan declined to comment on the cases. Family members were not available.

Mr. Fu moved to Taiyuan in late June, complaining of repeated harassment by police in Hangzhou City in the eastern province of Zhejiang, where he had been living with his wife.

Mr. Fu previously served two years in a labour camp for his role in the student-led demonstrations in Beijing's Tiananmen Square that were crushed by the military with heavy loss of life on June 4, 1989.

Police detained Mr. Fu for more than a month in December 1995 after he, along with dissidents Wang Donghai and Chen Longde, wrote a letter calling for the release of Wei Jingsheng, regarded as the father of China's modern democracy movement.

Mr. Fu also joined in an appeal with Mr. Wang and Mr. Chen Longde to China's parliament demanding the release of those jailed for their involvement in the movement.

Court defers Bhutto case against ouster

ISLAMABAD (R) — A legal action by sacked Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto to have her government restored was deferred by the Supreme Court Saturday.

The court said it would first consider petitions challenging the controversial eighth amendment, used by President Farooq Leghari to dismiss the National Assembly (lower house) and Ms. Bhutto's government on disputed charges of corruption and misrule.

"We have decided to take up cases on the eighth amendment first as we want to first dispose of the controversy on it," Chief Justice Sajjad Ali Shah declared.

"We know that other cases are equally important including Benazir Bhutto's case," the Associated Press of Pakistan (APP) quoted Justice Shah, who was heading a seven-member bench, as saying.

Shah said the court was conscious of the time factor involved in Ms. Bhutto's case in view of elections set for Feb. 3. "We will dispose of it expeditiously," he added.

Ms. Bhutto's lawyer Aitzaz Ahsan, who is asking the Supreme Court to restore the ousted government and National Assembly, said: "We bow before the decision of the court."

The court decided to amalgamate all petitions challenging the article, dating from the martial law era, used by Mr. Leghari to sack Ms. Bhutto and dissolve the National Assembly.

The eighth amendment was inserted into the constitution in 1985 by former military ruler General Muhammad Zia-ul-Haq.

A lawyer for one of the petitioners Mehmud Achak-zai, a deputy in the defunct National Assembly, said the eighth amendment had removed the sovereignty of parliament.

He argued that it gave enormous discretionary powers to one person, the president, to dissolve the lower house and dismiss an elected government without being held accountable to the people and without losing his own office.

Mr. Leghari, picked as Ms. Bhutto's presidential nominee after the 1993 election, said after taking office that he would never use his powers to dismiss an elected government.

Now the president, a former member of Ms. Bhutto-to-Pakistan People's Party, says he acted in the national interest.

TWA crash 'consistent' with fuel explosion

WASHINGTON (R) — The National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) said Friday evidence from the wreckage of TWA Flight 800 was "consistent" with a fuel tank explosion, and it proposed new steps to prevent fuel from reaching flash point.

The board said that reconstruction of the plane showed the Boeing 747's centre wing's partially full fuel tank to be deformed "consistent with an explosion originating within the tank."

But it stopped short of blaming mechanical reasons for the July 17 crash that killed all 230 people on board.

It said in a statement that parts of the wreckage pulled up from the ocean bottom off New York's Long Island showed no evidence of a bomb or missile. However, it added, "the investigation into what might have provided the source of ignition of the fuel-air mixture (including a bomb or missile) in the centre wing tank) is continuing."

The board made an urgent recommendation to the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) that it issue an airworthiness regulation to assure that fuel-air mixtures in planes do not rise to flash point.

It also called for design modifications, such as pumping nitrogen into partially full fuel tanks, where the fuel-air mixture is more likely to rise to a flash point, or requiring insulation between the tanks and heat-generating equipment, such as the air conditioners in the case of flight 800.

The FAA said it would review urgently the board's recommendations and respond promptly.

Boeing said it would comply with the recommendations once issued by the FAA, adding that "our position is any time safety is concerned, we prefer to go on the side of caution and we will take whatever actions are necessary to support any of the directives that come down from the FAA."

The Paris-bound TWA flight exploded shortly after takeoff from New York's Kennedy Airport and plunged into the Atlantic. Navy salvage crews have recovered more than 90 per cent of the plane's wreckage.

Another recommendation to the FAA was for a rule to require an appropriate amount of fuel be kept in the centre wing tank of the B-747, noting that the vapours in a partially full tank can more easily rise and ignite.

There should be proper monitoring and maintenance of the tank's temperature, the board said.

It said that hot air from the air conditioning units just beneath the centre fuel tank of Flight 800 may have raised the temperature of the fuel to flash point, but that it was not known what touched off the ignition.

Investigators in the five months since the crash have weighed signs that mechanical failure, a bomb or a missile from a ship or plane may have destroyed the plane.

But in recent weeks, as they salvaged more and more of the plane's remains from the ocean's bottom and found no bomb evidence, they began to lean toward mechanical failure.

Clinton names Richardson as U.N. envoy; announces economic advisers

WASHINGTON (R) — President Bill Clinton Friday named two longtime friends and allies to his cabinet, saying he would nominate Representative Bill Richardson to be his new U.N. ambassador and William Daley to be commerce secretary.

Mr. Richardson, a seven-term Democratic veteran of the House of Representatives who has built a formidable reputation as a diplomatic troubleshooter, was someone "who can not only talk but also act effectively," Mr. Clinton said.

He praised Mr. Daley, who led the 1993 drive for approval of the North American Free Trade Agreement and more recently orchestrated the Chicago democratic convention in August, as "a man of rare effectiveness."

At the crowded, stuffy news conference which had a moment of drama when Mr. Daley fainted and fell off the stage, Mr. Clinton also named White House aide Gene Sperling to head the National Economic Council (NEC) and said he wanted acting U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky to have permanent status.

All but Mr. Sperling require Senate confirmation, and initial reaction in the Republican-led body to Mr. Clinton's latest flurry of appointments was cautious.

Mr. Clinton also kept several administration holdovers on his second-term team, announcing that Attorney General Janet Reno, Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Carol Browner and White House Budget Director Franklin Ruines would all be retained.

He named Daniel Tarullo, who had been in the running to direct the NEC, as his international economic adviser.

The flurry of appointments still left a number of other vacancies to be filled, including the top jobs at the Departments of Labour, Transportation, Energy and Housing, as well as his chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers. Mr. Clinton hopes to complete his team by Christmas.

Mr. Richardson, 49, has shown a knack for negotiating the release of Americans held prisoner abroad. Mr. Clinton pointed out that just this week Mr. Richardson "was huddled in a rebel chieftain's hut in Sudan, eating barbecued goat and negotiating the freedom of three hostages."

At the United Nations he would succeed Madeleine Albright, whom Mr. Clinton has nominated to be his next secretary of state.

But a spokesman for conservative Sen. Jesse Helms, who chairs the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said Mr. Richardson would face tough questioning on U.N. reform.

"The confirmation process is not going to be a rubber stamp process," spokesman Mark Thiessen said.

12 killed in Algerian village

ALGIERS (AFP) — Twelve villagers from Moulay Karbi, near the southwestern Algerian town of Saida, have been killed by Islamic guerrillas, the daily Al Watan reported Saturday.

Eight victims were "finished off with a machine-gun" while four others were found 15 kilometres away. Two of them had been decapitated with an axe, the paper said.

The paper quoted witnesses who said the 12 villagers had gone to claim back a flock of sheep which had been stolen from the village by the 30-strong band of guerrillas, who had already burned down a nearby farm.

Security forces who combed the area after Wednesday's massacre found the heads of the two decapitated villagers and stolen goods in the gang's hideout.

Also Wednesday, 20 bus passengers were killed by gunmen at Benkhelil, 40 kilometres south of Algiers, taking the number of civilians to be killed in a month to more than 150.

Last Monday five people, three of them young men who had just finished their national service, were assassinated in Kolea, around 40 kilometres west of Algiers, according to press reports.

Conscripts are a prime target of Muslim extremists at war with the secular authorities since the cancellation of the second round of general elections the Islamic Salvation Front (IFS) was poised to win in 1992.

Students quiet; tanks remain in Rangoon

RANGOON (R) — Burma's military government Saturday kept army tanks in front of Rangoon city hall and armoured cars in other spots although there were no signs of fresh student unrest, witnesses and diplomats said.

Official media in editorials urged students, who launched major anti-government street protests last week, to be vigilant against elements attempting to use them in a bid to grab political power in the country.

Most roads near troubled Yangon University and the Yangon Institute of Technology, which were closed after thousands of students from the two universities staged the demonstrations, were reopened Saturday, witnesses and diplomats told Reuters.

Only sections of University Avenue, where opposition leader Aung San Suu Kyi lives in a lakeside residence, and roads near the Institute of Medicine in central Rangoon remained closed.

Medical trainees at the institute were the last group of students to stage peaceful rallies earlier this week. They had shouted anti-government slogans inside their campus a few days ago but did not take to the streets.

Diplomats said the presence of tanks and armoured cars was intended as a warning against further anti-government activity, which has slowed since the crackdown by the ruling State Law and Order Restoration Council (SLORC).

The SLORC threw a tight security net around the city and closed universities to break student attempts to mobilise colleagues and hit the streets.

The recent student protests were the biggest seen in Rangoon since the pro-democracy uprisings of 1988 that the military crushed, leaving thousands dead or in jail.

The SLORC has been criticised by the United States and the European Union for its tough stance on student protests. Thursday, the United Nations rebuked the government for human rights violations and urged it to release political prisoners.

The SLORC has also asked Ms. Suu Kyi, who says she has no links with the student protesters, to remain at her residence until the situation normalised. She has complied but expressed displeasure at the situation.

The SLORC also crossed swords with the United States Thursday, charging its top diplomat in Rangoon with interfering in Burma's internal affairs by trying to see Ms. Suu Kyi despite her virtual confinement.

A government spokesman said Friday that the move was a provocation aimed at preparing the ground for U.S. sanctions on Burma.

More than 860 students were detained after last week's protests. They were later freed.

But the government still holds some members of Ms. Suu Kyi's National League for Democracy (NLD) party. It has accused the NLD members along with Communists and the exiled student movement of instigating the student demonstrations.

EU leaders seek to exploit Milosevic olive branch

DUBLIN (R) — European Union leaders, anxious to avoid an explosion in Yugoslavia, sought Saturday to exploit an olive branch offer by Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic to send observers to investigate disputed local elections.

At their Dublin summit, the leaders set conditions for an international team to verify the regularity of last month's polls, including the right to re-run them under international supervision, mediator Carl Bildt said Saturday.

Under pressure from daily mass street protests over alleged fraud in the municipal elections, Milosevic offered Friday to allow the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) to send a delegation to check the fairness of the poll.

A declaration adopted at the summit called on Yugoslavia to "demonstrate full respect for human and minority rights and the observance of democratic norms" and noted with interest Belgrade's invitation of OSCE observers.

"The OSCE will wish to consider the conditions for such a mission, notably in relation to the right to recommend a reversal of the annulments or a rerun of some elections," the EU draft said.

The United States Friday branded Milosevic's offer a whitewash, but the Europeans were more inclined to use it as a potential lever for a democratic transition in Belgrade.

Mr. Bildt said Mr. Milosevic would have to commit himself to allow media freedom and a government in dialogue with all political forces to establish democratic rules for presidential and parliamentary elections due in 1997.

The U.N.'s high representative in Bosnia said Serbia was facing economic collapse and no government in Europe could hide any longer behind the "old-style" argument of non-interference in the internal affairs of states.

"We have no interest whatsoever in an economic and social collapse of Serbia," Mr. Bildt said, but he added: "There is no way that Serbia can remain an enclave (in Europe) of ideas that normally end up on the scrap heap of history."

Diplomats said there was debate among EU governments over the significance of the daily marches by up to 200,000 pro-democracy demonstrators in Belgrade.

Some member states, notably Germany and the Scandinavians, argued that the collapse of communism in Yugoslavia was the inevitable last act of a process that began when the Berlin Wall fell 1989 and spread through Central and Eastern Europe.

Those countries tended to argue that the EU should give the Serbian opposition strong support.

But France and some others urged caution, warning of the risk of a bloodbath in Belgrade. They noted the working class had not joined students and intellectuals in the protests so far, in contrast to Czechoslovakia's "Velvet

Revolution."

They also argued that whatever his responsibility for igniting the war in former Yugoslavia, Milosevic had in the end played a constructive role in the Bosnia peace process and could still be a stabilising factor in the Balkans.

President Milosevic appeared to be offering an olive branch to opposition protesters, but Washington said it was sceptical of his plan to call a trans-Atlantic security agency to help end Serbia's political unrest.

The invitation to the OSCE also failed to quell the massive street protests, with more demonstrations planned Saturday in Belgrade and other points around Serbia.

One determined group of 150 students marched for 20 hours, arriving in the capital Saturday after setting out from Novi Sad, 80 kilometres further north. They were welcomed by a crowd of more than 1,000.

The United States, which is part of the OSCE, reacted

Belgrade students march across the bridge over Sava River during the protest against Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic Friday. The Belgrade students and supporters of the Serbian opposition coalition Zajedno have been protesting for nearly four weeks against election fraud and calling for Mr. Milosevic's resignation (Reuter photo) with scepticism. "We are going to keep the pressure on," said U.S. State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns.

But in Vienna, the OSCE welcomed Belgrade's invitation, saying in a statement that it would consider the offer and give a rapid reply.

In a letter to OSCE President Flavio Carboni, Yugoslav Foreign Minister Milan Milutinovic said the organisation has been invited to Belgrade "because of the dissatisfaction with the election results and objections formulated by the opposition party."

The U.S. spokesman made it clear that Washington rejected "the legalistic arguments" used by Mr. Milosevic to justify his cancellation of the election results.

Nevertheless, Mr. Burns said the United States would consider the Serb proposal, adding that any delegation to Belgrade should be led by a "prominent international figure."

On Saturday, the Belgrade government accused the anti-Milosevic opposition of trying to seek financial aid from the American government and Congress.

The accusation came in a statement by Tanjug, commenting on a meeting a group of Serbian opposition representatives had with several members of the U.S. Congress this week in Washington. According to Tanjug, the opposition representatives were "openly looking for financial aid from the American government and Congress."

EU leaders turn to East Europe

DUBLIN (R) — European Union (EU) leaders, having clinched a landmark deal for their planned single currency, turn to the rest of the future Saturday as they meet counterparts from 11 countries clamouring to join.

Enlargement and a joint attack on crime and drugs were set to take centre stage as the leaders of the 15-nation bloc began the final day of their end-of-year summit.

The heads of state and government were to meet counterparts from Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Slovenia, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Bulgaria, Romania and Cyprus.

All have been promised they can join the union some time in the near future. Formal negotiations are due to begin about a year from now, six months after the EU finishes rewriting its treaty.

Irish officials admitted the discussions might be an anti-climax after the accord reached Friday on a pact to keep government budgets sound after the Euro is introduced on Jan. 1, 1999.

Irish Prime Minister John Bruton said the pact, which broke a Franco-German standoff on Economic and Monetary Union (EMU), showed EU leaders had "the political will to make the project work."

European leaders Friday agreed a package of measures to clamp down on organised crime and drug trafficking, with France and the Netherlands putting aside their public differences in the interests of the union.

Irish diplomats at the European Union summit said the joint action programme "represented a substantial degree of progress on this critical problem" which the EU presidency had made a top priority in trying to win back citizen confidence.

The bloc's 15 member states pledged to increase cooperation between customs, police and business to prevent drug trafficking and drug "tourism," with provision for severe jail terms.

They will also crack down on the domestic cultivation and production of drugs, banning the growing of cannabis under glass or polythene, except for legitimate businesses producing hemp.

"Cannabis grown for legitimate use is of very little interest to those who wish to use it for other purposes," an Irish ministerial aide said.

Member states will improve the exchange of information between forensic laboratories on the chemical profiling of seized drugs, increase joint customs surveillance operations, such as monitoring consignments of illicit drugs across borders, and set up a directory of operational skills and knowledge.

The Netherlands, which takes over the EU presidency next month and has been sharply criticised for being too soft on drugs, joined the call for tougher action, but remains unwilling to abandon a 20-year experiment in tolerating the use of small amounts of soft drugs and close down its "coffee-shops."

France protests that Dutch laxity has led to thousands of young "tourists" flocking to the Netherlands to buy cheap and readily-available drugs which are then circulated in France and other neighbouring countries.

But the two countries agreed to lift reservations on the package and hold further discussions on how to fight drug addiction within a common policy on crime and drug trafficking.

Dutch Prime Minister Wim Kok told reporters he had "frankly and constructive" talks with French President Jacques Chirac who viewed the agreement as a first step in the fight against drugs.

France said it would maintain border checks in the north to try to prevent drug "tourism."

"A whole crisis atmosphere, created in the media and fanned by politicians, has fortunately, and to the satisfaction of our prime minister, not led to a clash in front of our partners," one senior Dutch diplomat said.

"Mr. Kok was prepared to say his bit if he'd been pushed around, but he hoped all along that relations (with France) could be normalised. And, on the basis of reasonable arguments, we can now elaborate further on cooperation," he said.

"On reflection, we see what has been agreed on today as a good step in the right direction. There is no fuel for further misunderstandings or bitterness."

The agreement noted a sharp rise in the quantity of drugs coming into the EU from Central and Eastern Europe, particularly the Balkans, and promised actions to curb drug smuggling.

The drugs and crime discussions also came within the inter-governmental conference (IGC) review which has proposed stepping up EU efforts to tackle organised crime and create an area of "freedom, justice and security" for the bloc's 380 million citizens.

Belgian police step up search for missing children

BRUSSELS (R) — Belgian police hunting missing children said they found two entrances to a disused mine shaft Saturday that could contain traces of a paedophile gang's victims.

A police spokesman said it could take a week to complete the search. One entrance, found under a concrete block hidden by a pile of scrap cars, was flooded.

The police hunt was centred on a shaft in an old mine in the south Belgian town of Charleroi. It is part of a mine complex that was searched in October on information provided by Marc Dutroux, chief suspect in Belgium's child sex abuse scandal.

"We have found two holes and are seeking to excavate them so that we can reach the tunnel which conforms with the information we have," Gendarmerie Major Marcel Guissard told a news conference at the scene.

Mr. Dutroux and several alleged accomplices detained since August after two young girls were rescued alive from a secret dungeon in a house he owned.

The bodies of four other girls were later found buried at properties connected to Mr. Dutroux and an acquaintance, Bernard Weinstein, whose body was also found.

Police are searching for at least seven missing children.

Acting on what they said was fresh information, police returned to Jumet Friday, towing away scrap cars and searching the basements of four houses for other possible entrances to the mine.

"Based on information from some of the arrested people, and certain enquiries we have been able to make, we are convinced that here at Jumet...Not far from the tunnel we searched in (October), there is another underground place where we may find traces of children or somewhere they were held," Maj. Guissard told RTBF Television Friday.

On Saturday, Belgian media reported a cache of arms had been found at the scene, but it was unclear if this was related to the Mr. Dutroux inquiry.

On Tuesday, police charged a man in connection with the abduction in 1993 in Brussels of a nine-year-old Moroccan girl, Loubna Benissa.

Preparing for failure as well

KING HASSAN II of Morocco has been in the forefront of the Arab leaders calling for peaceful accommodation with Israel on the basis of U.N. Security Council resolutions 242 and 338. He has continuously advocated negotiations with Israel for that purpose, just as Morocco has been an early subscriber to the call for peace between the Jewish state and the Arab World. This strong and unwavering support for Morocco for a Middle East settlement seems to have been dealt a severe blow of late with optimism giving way to pessimism even by Rabat which was among the early pioneers for peace in the area.

The recently convened session of the Academy of the Kingdom of Morocco (AKM) in Amman is, above all, an expression of this sense of dismay, a sense that has lately been permeating the Arab World in particular, and the world at large. The AKM meeting brought together eminent scholars and intellectuals from all over the world to ponder the question: "And what if the peace process fails?" There was unanimity among the conferees at the end of their three-day deliberations that the hopes generated by the peace accords with Israel are now being shaken by the headline policies of the Netanyahu government. The fact that the session was held in Jordan is an indicator that not only Morocco is losing faith in the future of peace, but also this country whose leadership has done so much for the cause of peace and coexistence.

A chain of events that started with the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin last year and ended with the victory of the right-wing Likud leader, Benjamin Netanyahu, surely vindicates the current prognosis that the Likud government in Israel is simply incapable of making peace with the Arab World. Israel's decision Friday to bolster settlements in Palestinian territories by exploiting the killing of two Israeli settlers by elements belonging to an extreme Palestinian faction is another demonstration of the determination of Israel under Netanyahu to wreak havoc with the prospects of peace.

If this is the essence of the verdict of the AKM conference on the Israeli government, the question that remains is what to do about it. It is not sufficient to make the proper diagnosis of the problem especially when there is already a universal conviction that hardliners in Israel are not there to make peace but rather prepare the groundwork for renewed conflict. As one of the participants remarked: "The current situation requires from the intellectual elite of Arab and Islamic countries to propose solutions to overcome the existing obstacles." Perhaps the Arab intellectuals, but especially the ruling elite, should devote more time to devising strategies based on the assumption that the peace process is going to fail under the present circumstances. And they should prepare themselves for that eventuality. However, they should do whatever in their power to deprive extremists, especially Israeli hardliners, from taking us all back to the days of strife and misery.

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

ISRAELI PREMIER Benjamin Netanyahu is playing with fire and the Arabs have to be very careful and refrain from acting irresponsibly as the premier is out to shed Arab blood and expand the Israeli occupation, according to Sultan Hattab, a writer for Al Ra'i daily. Saturday. Referring to the attack carried out by Palestinian groups against settlers two days ago, resulting in two deaths, the writer said that the attack offered Mr. Netanyahu the excuse he needed to beef up the existing settlements and increase their influence in the occupied Arab territories. Willingly or unwillingly, those who carried out the attack on the settlers played into the hands of the Israeli extremists led by Mr. Netanyahu who found in it an excuse to offer incentives to Jews holding settlements and facilities to expand the existing colonies on Arab lands, charged the writer. He said those elements that carried out the attack are irresponsible people because their move helped give Mr. Netanyahu, whose hands are already stained with Arab blood, the pretext to assume an even more hard-line position and a pretext to ruin the peace process. The writer criticised U.S. President Bill Clinton who, he said, has been silently condoning the Israeli prime minister's actions and his settlement programmes, but was quick to mourn the dead settlers and condemn the attackers. He said that the latest attack on the settlers can only be a setback for the peace process.

A WRITER for Al Dastour discussed the execution of criminals who commit murders in cold blood and suggested that their execution be carried out in public so as to deter others from committing crimes. Mohammad Stubei said in the past few months, Jordanians were appalled by a series of crimes committed in the country and are demanding stricter penalties to stop further crimes. While appreciating the efforts of the Jordanian police to solve many of these crimes, the public believes that new methods should be adopted to execute convicted criminals, so as to deter others from such brutal acts, he said. It goes without saying that hanging criminals is bound to deter people from committing crimes, but, said the writer, hanging should be carried out in public so that it can have deeper and more effective impact on would-be criminals. The writer demanded that the current penal code be amended in such a way as to enable the concerned authorities to hang those convicted of committing brutal and premeditated crimes in public.

Sunday's Economic Pulse

'Jabal Ali is not for us'

LAST MONTH the Ministry of Information in the United Arab Emirates (UAE) gave some journalists, included myself, the opportunity to visit the duty free zone in Dubai, called Jabal Ali.

We had expected to find a mountain (jabal) or a shepherd (Ali); instead, we came to see the port of Jabal Ali, carved from the sea into the flat desert. An elaborate briefing covering the establishment of Jabal Ali, its functions and expected results were given us.

Those who were impressed while in Jabal Ali, came back to Amman to advocate repeating the same experiment in Jordan. Unfortunately, there are practical difficulties which make such a venture merely a dream that cannot be converted into a reality.

First, we should note that Dubai, and perhaps the whole UAE, is a free zone. No income tax is imposed on either nationals or foreigners who conduct business and make money in the country. Customs duty, when applicable, has a ceiling of 4 per cent. Jabal Ali, therefore, is a natural extension of the Dubai economy, rather than the exception, as the case would be in Jordan or, for that matter, in Egypt.

Jabal Ali is a natural extension to Dubai free market. Those who run Jabal Ali have the mentality of a private trader, which is the culture in Dubai, not the mentality of the bureaucratic manager of the public sector of which Jabal Ali is a part.

To manage something similar in Jordan, we need, and lack, an exceptional managerial mentality in the public sector which has a different culture. It should not be forgotten that the directors of our Free Zone Corporation are usually selected from seasoned executives of the Customs Department, known for its complicated routine.

What Jabal Ali provides to businesses is not the tax exemptions, which are available to all companies in the country; it provides extra services, land, buildings, cheap energy and the huge port which can comfortably handle 67 ships at the same time, and the services of handling, storing, assembling, distributing, in addition to various administrative and personal services, including visas, residences, and even divorce formalities, which Jordan is not equipped to provide.

In order for such high quality services to be offered, the government of Dubai established a sophisticated infrastructure in Jabal Ali, which took 10 years to construct and cost $2.5 billion. The cost is not yet recovered, even though the number of customers utilising the services of Jabal Ali exceeds one thousand. The income statement of Jabal Ali is kept as a secret.

All that we were told was that the current revenues exceed the operational expenditure, if the cost of infrastructure is excluded.

The capital cost of building something similar to Jabal Ali is obviously beyond the financial means of Jordan.

Jabal Ali is positioned around 30 kilometres out of the city of Dubai, in the plain desert, spread over 10 square kilometres, with additional 90 square kilometres available for future expansion.

It has one of the largest sea ports on earth, carved in the desert. It appears in the photographs taken from satellites as a landmark on the surface of earth, just like the Chinese Great Wall.

Jordan's geography does not allow something like that to be built in the country.

It is worth mentioning that Jabal Ali created some 30 thousand jobs. Unfortunately, it employs no more than 35 nationals. Almost 99 per cent of the jobs are filled by outsiders. It is known that the most important benefit from free zones is the creation of jobs, but in this case, it only resulted in a higher influx of foreigners to the country. The question is whether Dubai needs more consumers to enhance imports and more tenants to fill the empty apartments and populate the country.

Jabal Ali is really a great achievement. However, being impressed is one thing, and calling for building a Jordanian Jabal Ali in Aqaba or Mafraq is another. A Jordanian Jabal Ali is not feasible, not practical, and not possible.

Whether we like it or not, Jordan's comparative advantage lies in the production of services, which do not need free zones.

Separation of powers is 'one of the main principles of democracy and constitutional government'

By Dr. Maan Abu Nowar

EVEN DURING the ancient Greek city states, the doctrine of the separation of powers was one of the main principles of democracy and one of the main pillars of constitutional government. The theory of separation of powers was implicit in the writings of Aristotle (384-322 BC), in his division of the constitution into three separate elements or powers: 1, the deliberative power; legislative; 2, the executive of magistracies power; executive; 3, the judicial power; judiciary.

Throughout ages, the division of powers remained more or less present in different forms. Gradually, each of the three powers became separate, each according to its function and the authorities vested in it: 1, the legislative function, concerned with the enactment of laws and regulations determining the structure and powers of the public authorities and regulating the conduct of citizens and private organisations; 2, the executive function, concerned with the maintenance and survival of the state and its government, excluding the functions of the legislative and the judicial powers; 3, the judicial function, concerned with all disputed questions of fact and law, in accordance with laws made by the legislative and expounded by the courts.

Thus, the primary organs of the democratic state, within its system of government based on law, are the legislature, the executive and the courts. Without this division of functions, without the separation of these organs according to their functions, it would be pretentious to claim the existence of the values of democracy and the rule of law.

English philosopher James Harrington (1611-1677) was the first political theorist who argued for a written constitution with separation of powers, rotation of the executive and secret ballot.

In his Second Treatise of Civil Government of 1690, the English philosopher and political theorist John Locke (1632-1704) wrote: "It may be too great a temptation to humane frailty, apt to grasp at power, for the same persons who have the power of making laws, to have also in their hands the power to execute them, whereby they may exempt themselves from obedience to the laws they make, and suit the law, both in its making and execution, to their own private advantage."

Another philosopher and political theorist who expounded the principle of separation of powers was the French jurist de Montesquieu (1689-1755). He wrote: "When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person, or in the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty. Again, there can be no liberty, if the judiciary power is not separated from the legislative and executive. Where it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control: for the judge will be then the legislator. Where it joined to the executive, the judge might behave with violence and oppression. There would be an end in every thing, where the same man, or the same body, whether of the nobles or of the people, to exercise those three powers, that of enacting the laws, that of executing the public resolutions and that of trying the causes of the individuals."

The founders of the United States constitution of 1787 expressed clearly the principle of separation of powers. They vested each group of the main constitutional functions in a separate organ. At that time, they may have emulated the British constitution, when the executive powers were being transferred from the crown to the cabinet. In the U.S. constitution, the three powers are vested as follows: 1, legislative power is vested in the Congress consisting of the Senate and the House of Representatives; 2, executive power is vested in the president; and 3, judicial power is vested in the supreme court and any other courts established by Congress.

What does the doctrine of separation of powers mean? Because of the differences in the various constitutions, it may mean three different constitutional provisions; 1, that the same person or persons may not be part of more than one organ of the state. A minister may not sit in parliament, or a judge may not be a member of the cabinet; 2, that one organ of the state may not control or interfere in the working of the other. The judiciary is independent of the executive or the ministers may not be responsible to parliament; 3, that one organ of the state may not have the authority to exercise the functions of the other. The ministers may not have legislative powers.

A careful examination of the three provisions above will naturally show that it is nearly impossible to have a complete and successful separation of powers. Some within the constitution there is a system of checks and balances which distributes elements of control and influence between the three organs of government.

The separation of powers in the French constitution is slightly different from that of the U.S. The constitution of the Fifth Republic of 1958 created a stronger executive; it restricted the powers of the legislative in compelling the government to resign, and it gave the president more freedom to rule by decree under certain circumstances.

What does the doctrine of separation of powers mean? Because of the differences in the various constitutions, it may mean three different constitutional provisions; 1, that the same person or persons may not be part of more than one organ of the state. A minister may not sit in parliament, or a judge may not be a member of the cabinet; 2, that one organ of the state may not control or interfere in the working of the other. The judiciary is independent of the executive or the ministers may not be responsible to parliament; 3, that one organ of the state may not have the authority to exercise the functions of the other. The ministers may not have legislative powers.

A careful examination of the three provisions above will naturally show that it is nearly impossible to have a complete and successful separation of powers. Some Kingdom is expressed in the facts of the functions of power: the laws enacted by the legislature must be applied by the executive and must be upheld by the judiciary, but if a judge acts ultra vires, the legislature may hold him to account, and the executive may remove him from office. Thus, in practice, the principle of freedom under the United Kingdom constitution is guaranteed by the independence of the judiciary, which acts as a brake upon power, more than being a power. This is while the legislative and the executive are the instigators of policy, and always need to act in concert.

In the constitution of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, the principle of separation of powers stands moderately between the U.S. and French constitutions, on the one hand, and the constitution of the United Kingdom, on the other. As in all modern constitutions, "The Nation is the source of all powers." (Article 24). In the same chapter, the separation of powers is clearly provided for in the following articles: Article 25. The Legislative Power shall be vested in the National Assembly and the King. The National Assembly shall consist of a Senate and a Chamber of Deputies. Article 26. The Executive Power shall be vested in the King, who shall exercise his powers through his ministers in accordance with the provisions of the present Constitution. Article 27. The Judicial Power shall be exercised by the courts of law in the varying types and degrees. All judgements shall be given in accordance with the law and pronounced in the name of the King. Furthermore, the details of the functions, responsibilities and authorities of each of the three organs of the state mentioned in the three articles above are described separately in each of the following chapters of the constitution: Chapter 4, The Executive Power; Chapter 5, The Legislative Power — The National Assembly; Chapter 6, The Judiciary.

The system of checks and balances between the three organs of the state are described in details in Part II of the Constitution "Provision governing both Houses" of the National Assembly.

The Executive Power in the Jordanian Constitution stands as a moderate compromise between the U.S. and the U.K. constitutions. The King may select his prime minister from any House of the National Assembly or outside them. On recommendation from the prime minister, the King may appoint his ministers in accordance with the needs of the country; he can select them all from the National Assembly or all from outside it. He can also select a ministerial team from both within and outside the National Assembly. However, the cabinet remains subject to a vote of confidence by the elected chamber of deputies, in accordance with the democratic principle of government responsibility and accountability.

The only contradiction of the principle of separation of powers in the Jordanian Constitution is the interference of the legislative in the work of the judiciary, as provided for in Article 55: "Ministers shall be tried by a high tribunal for offences which may be attributed to them in the course of the performance of their duties."

Furthermore, senators with judicial office may sit in judgement in the high tribunal, contrary to the practice of the House of Lords, as an example of democracy.

Thus, His Majesty the King, in accordance with the constitution, is entirely free to select his prime minister and ministers from within or from outside the National Assembly or from both, without any need whatsoever to amend the constitution. It is important for those who debate the need for the selection of the prime minister and the ministers from outside the National Assembly not to use the pretence of the principle of the separation of powers as a political or legal justification for their point of view; for that separation is very conspicuous in our constitution.

The writer is a member of the Upper House of Parliament, and a former deputy prime minister and minister of information. He contributed this article to the Jordan Times.

Erroneous computing

To the Editor:

I WRITE with reference to the two-part study: "Analysis shows standings of banks in Jordan" (Jordan Times, Nov. 6, 1996) and "Two banks account for 52% of Jordan's banking sector profits" (Jordan Times, Nov. 7-8, 1996), conducted by Mifteh Akel, which aims at outlining the financial results and performance of banks operating in Jordan in 1995.

Upon reviewing the performance criteria outlined in the study, it became clear to us that Mr. Akel did not consistently use the results of the Jordan operations of certain banks and has, therefore, arrived at some erroneous conclusions.

For example, Mr. Akel utilised the consolidated results of the Jordan and West Bank and Gaza operations of one bank and compared them only to the results of the Jordan operations of the remaining banks. As such, the relative size, profitability and performance of the said bank appeared greater than they are in reality.

As for Cairo Amman Bank, Mr. Akel correctly used the results of the Jordan operations in 1995. However, in calculating growth rates from the previous year, he referred to Cairo Amman Bank's consolidated 1994 results. As such, two important growth criteria were incorrectly calculated:

1. Deposits (including inter-bank deposits) with Cairo Amman Bank's Jordan branches increased from JD 184.3 million at yearend 1994, to JD 245.2 million at yearend 1995. Cairo Amman Bank's deposit growth rate, consistent with the study's methodology, was, therefore, a positive 33.0 per cent; not minus 33.2 per cent. This ranks Cairo Amman Bank first among the 19 banks covered in the study, in terms of deposit growth.

2. The total assets of Cairo Amman Bank's Jordan operations increased from JD 330.2 million at the end of 1994, to JD 417.1 million at the end of 1995. Accordingly, Cairo Amman Bank achieved a positive total asset growth rate of 26.3 per cent in 1995 and not a minus 2.3 per cent. This ranks Cairo Amman Bank third among the said 19 banks, in terms of total asset growth.

We would also like to take this opportunity to request Mr. Akel to review his work and republish it, in the interest of professional research methodology.

Jordan takes delivery of U.S. military aid

The equipment was delivered under a drawdown programme of U.S. military stocks, approved by President Bill Clinton in February. The size of the aid package is still modest compared to the hundreds of millions of dollars in military assistance pumped by Washington to Israel and Egypt every year since the two countries signed a peace treaty in 1979.

U.S. officials say military aid to Jordan this year also included around $25 million worth of equipment supplied under a regular Excess Defence Articles (EDA) programme, including 500 small trucks, rifles and medical supplies.

Mr. Clinton last month named Jordan a major non-NATO ally. The Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) ally of the United States, entitled the Kingdom for priority consideration for EDA assistance. Following are major excerpts from the King's comments at the press conference:

"I am indeed deeply grateful to the president of the United States and the U.S. administration, the Pentagon for their support and we are proud of our association with each other as we have always been. We are upholding the same principles and ideals and struggling for a better tomorrow. The armed forces are involved not only in the protection of the Kingdom and its Constitution and democracy but they are also involved in peace-keeping missions in very different parts of the world and they have been committed and will continue to be committed to the cause of stability and peace and security in this entire region."

"As for the U.S. and Jordan, they are old friends and if I look back to my life I recall many decades of our struggle together in different phases of the evolution of this world through the cold war, through many crises, crises that affected this region and the world."

"We have always been close together and the fact that we are privileged to become a major non-NATO ally to the U.S. is something we highly value and treasure."

"The United States looks to Jordan as one of the most important, constructive, and moderate forces for peace," Mr. Egan told the news conference.

"This is still a region in which there are real threats. The ability of the Jordanian Armed Forces to meet those threats... is the fundamental rationale for the provision of this military equipment," he said.

'Does the U.S. voting system need revamping?'

By Wilma Rule, Steven Hill and Sandy Fernandez

DOES THE U.S. voting system need revamping? In our last congressional elections, only 39 per cent of eligible voters voted, down from a low 55 per cent for the presidential elections two years before. Among 21 democracies in Western Europe and North America, the U.S. ranks next-to-last in voter turnout in presidential elections, behind Switzerland, and last in congressional elections. In state and local races, the two major parties sometimes have to beat the hush in order to get anyone to run; much less vote. Women and minorities continue to be underrepresented at all levels and, with the recent Supreme Court decision rescinding race-based districting, more of the population than ever is feeling that voting is a futile activity.

But in cities such as Boston, Cincinnati, Oakland, San Francisco and Seattle, reformers are trying to reorganise an apathetic electorate by taking aim at the very process of voting itself. They are trying to replace our current process with proportional representation (PR), the system used to elect legislatures in most of the world's established democracies.

In essence, PR allows different voting blocs or political parties to win legislative representation that is proportional to their numbers at the polls. It's a voting bloc wins 10 per cent of the vote, it wins 10 per cent of the seats; 30 per cent of the vote, 30 per cent of the seats; and so on. While PR cannot be used for single-winner races like those for president or governor, it does allow the electorate to reward the top few candidates on a slate (think city council, school board, state legislature, anything up to and including the federal House of Representatives) instead of simply giving a seat to the top vote-getter in a district.

The easiest way to explain PR may be to take a look at a single type of race in a single locality: congressional representation for North Carolina.

Each of North Carolina's 12 congressional districts is currently represented by one seat in the House of Representatives, and each of these seats is awarded to the candidate who wins the most votes in districtwide elections. In the most common scenario, a two-party, two-candidate race, the 50.1 per cent or more of the population that voted for the winning candidate will see themselves represented in Congress. The others — even if they represent 49.9 per cent of the population — will have earned no voice with their vote. Nothing. Voters know this, and so often vote for the candidate they believe realistically stands a chance of breaking the magical 50 per cent election threshold, rather than the candidate they actually like best. Often, they do not bother to vote at all.

Numbers of congressional seats are calculated by population — California, for example, has 52 representatives, while Alaska has one — so North Carolina would still have to fill 12 seats under PR. However, since PR depends on multi-seat contests, the districts would have to be redrawn to create a smaller number of bigger districts. One proposal considered a variety of factors (like population density and geography) in trying to meld similar existing districts, and suggested the state be reconfigured from 12 single-seat districts into four multi-seat districts, with three seats each. Instead of voting for one congressional representative, a citizen of Asheville would now vote for three.

The new configuration would change the way politicians and parties campaign. Independents and third-party candidates would benefit from PR's lower election threshold (in a battle over three seats, just one vote over 25 per cent of the electorate is high enough to earn a seat, as opposed to the over-50 per cent majority currently required in a single-winner race). The lower election threshold allows candidates to win seats without having to water down their views for majority appeal. Consequently, voters would probably see more independents and third parties running for office, and more of those voters would be represented by someone they chose.

The use of PR would also raise the elected numbers of another portion of the population — women. Under our current system, women remain by far the most under-represented group in the U.S. They make up only 11 per cent of the House of Representatives, placing the U.S. seventh among 27 long-established democracies in terms of women's representation in national legislatures. In fact, in the House, underrepresentation of African Americans is largely an underrepresentation of African American women. While there are currently almost two million more African American women than African American men in the population, there are almost four times as many African American women in the House. The story is the same for Latinos, who make up 0.6 per cent of the House while making up 5 per cent of the population. And in the 50 state senates there are nearly five men for every woman. In countries that use PR, however, the numbers are much different. Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden boast female representation above 30 per cent. South Africa, which chose a PR system in 1993 to better represent the members of its new multiracial democracy, also beats the U.S., with 25 per cent female representation. In countries like Germany, that use both multi-seat districts and U.S.-style, single-seat districts, three times more women won seats in the PR districts during the last election than were granted them in the single-seat districts. More U.S. women — including more African Americans — were elected to state legislatures in multi-seat districts than in single-seat ones.

The evidence is compelling that single-seat legislative districts — the voting system used in most U.S. elections — discriminate against women. Seventy-five years after the 19th Amendment gave women the vote, our major political parties still think twice before putting a woman on the ballot. After all, that woman has to be inoffensive enough to appeal to over 50 per cent of the voting public. Under our present system, a small number of discriminatory or fearful voters can deny a female candidate a seat. Under PR, the parties would be sponsoring several candidates, and throwing a woman or two into the mix would not be the huge gamble it apparently is in a winner-take-all race. Voters would be much more likely to spend their votes on women if they felt those candidates actually stood a chance of winning. And, having a better chance of winning, women would be more encouraged to run for office.

Implementing alternative voting systems at the local, state and congressional levels does not require any revisions to the U.S. Constitution. Changes would be needed only in some applicable local and state laws, and in one federal law. Representative Cynthia McKinney (D-Ga.) has already introduced a bill that would return to the states the option of electing their congressional delegations by PR. McKinney unveiled the Voters' Choice Act in 1995 after her district was wiped out by the U.S. Supreme Court's decision that race-conscious districting was unconstitutional.

The same votes counted by different voting systems can produce completely different representation. Passage of the act would give a long way towards providing equal representation to women and "minorities." It would also open up Congress to third parties, allowing them to compete on a near-level playing field with the two major parties, ending the near-stranglehold they have had on U.S. politics for most of this century.

Funny, nearly a year after being introduced, the Voters' Choice Act is still languishing in the House Judiciary Committee.

PR systems:

LIST SYSTEM: The most widely used form of PR and the best for women. The voter selects one party or bloc and its slate of candidates to represent her in multi-seat districts. If there are ten seats in a district and a party receives 30 per cent of the vote, it receives three — 30 per cent — of the seats. Usually the top three names on the party slate fill the seats. Sometimes the voters choose these top candidates, and sometimes they are prechosen by the party.

MIXED MEMBER: Elects half the legislature by the list system and the other half by a system of single-seat districts. Used by the governments of Germany and New Zealand.

PREFERENCE VOTING: Allows blocs of like-minded voters to win representation in proportion to their voting strength. The voter simply ranks candidates in an order of preference. Once a voter's first choice is elected or eliminated, excess votes are "transferred" to subsequent preferences until all positions are filled.

CUMULATIVE VOTING: Every voter has the same number of votes as there are contested seats. Voters can put all their votes on one candidate or cast three votes for one candidate, two for another, or some other combination. Candidates with the most votes win.

PNA warns Israel, urges Palestinians

The Israeli decision "exposes the true plans of the Israeli government to destroy the entire peace process and return the area to the edge of explosion," it said.

It also repeated accusations that the Israeli army had deployed tanks and forces outside Palestinian self-rule areas.

The settlements decision "is extremely dangerous, the most dangerous issue we have faced since Netanyahu's government came to power," International Cooperation Minister Nabil Shaarh told journalists after the cabinet meeting.

"The Palestinian National Authority (PNA) will move on all fronts, both at the United Nations and with popular mass action to challenge the Israeli settlement policy," he said.

Mr. Netanyahu announced the new incentive programme, which makes Jewish settlement in the Palestinian territories a "national priority," in response to the killing this week of a settler woman and her son by suspected Palestinian militants in the West Bank.

The PLO statement condemned plans to expand existing Jewish settlements, the Friday decision on incentives, and Israel's deployment of tanks in response to Israeli-PLO gunbattles that cost scores of lives in September.

"The Palestinian leadership calls on the masses everywhere to firmly confront with all possible means the Israeli settlement aggression in order to defend the land," it said.

At its weekly meeting, Mr. Netanyahu's cabinet decided to reinstate benefits for West Bank settlers, such as lower taxes, that are already given to residents of disadvantaged towns inside Israel, and to Israelis in Gaza and the Golan Heights.

Israel's main ally Washington, going beyond standard U.S. phraseology, called the settlement incentive decision "troubling," suggesting it could hamper peace talks as a step "seen to preempt the outcome of a negotiation."

Since taking office in June, the Netanyahu government has given the go-ahead for the construction of thousands of homes in existing settlements but has yet to meet the demands of settler leaders to establish new outposts.

Palestinians fear Mr. Netanyahu's government is creating "facts on the ground" to cement its control over Arab land.

Senior Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat told Reuters: "To consider the West Bank as part of Israel and to expand and encourage settlements means Netanyahu is officially killing the peace process, which was based on the crucial principle of gradually ending occupation."

Under the landmark 1993 peace deal with the PLO, Israel's previous Labour government withdrew from much of the Gaza Strip and from most Palestinian towns in the West Bank. But Mr. Netanyahu has pledged to bolster Jewish settlements.

Washington insisted that a new U.N. chief was needed to improve relations between the world body and the U.S. congress, which had linked the payment of $1.3 billion in arrears to the Egyptian's departure.

In an interview with CNN earlier Friday, Mr. Annan called on the United States Friday to pay its debt to the world body.

"I hope to be able to work with the new U.S. administration ... to convince them that they should pay their debt," Mr. Annan said.

"By withholding their contribution, they offend friend and foe alike ... you cannot manage an effective organisation on a shoestring budget."

Britain's Foreign Secretary Malcolm Rifkind welcomed the Security Council's recommendation of Mr. Annan in a statement released in London.

"His experience and outstanding personal qualities make him ideally qualified to lead the U.N. in tackling the many urgent tasks which it currently faces," said Mr. Rifkind, on an official visit to Cyprus.

Moscow also welcomed the appointment. Russian Foreign Ministry spokesman Mikhail Demurin said the choice of Mr. Annan would "ensure that the organisation can continue to work in a constructive manner."

"Because Mr. Ghalil, although a good leader, was slow on U.N. reforms ... he lost credibility, the U.N. lost credibility in Congress, so Congress over the years did not pay America's dues."

Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Shen Guofang noted that China had always supported the election of an African to the post.

The fact that Mr. Annan was recommended, "shows the trust and expectations of the international community in Africa," Mr. Shen said.

Ghana's Deputy Foreign Affairs Minister Mohammad Ben Chabmas told AFP that Mr. Annan "is up to the task. He has worked for 30 years in the U.N. and he knows the organisation."

The Polish ambassador to the U.N., Zbigniew Maria Wlosowicz, said: "Kofi Annan knows the organisation very well and will know how to lead change in the United Nations, an evolution without revolution."

In Stockholm, Swedish Prime Minister Goran Persson gave an enthusiastic welcome to Mr. Annan's appointment, saying Mr. Annan "is a person known and respected who has given an large part of his life to the service of the U.N."

Press reaction in the Ivory Coast, home of the outgoing candidate Amara Essy, was one of irritation at Mr. Annan's appointment, however.

The daily Le Jour deplored "this cynical war of the vetoes carried out by the Western powers, which is flabbergasting and humiliating." Another newspaper, Le Populaire, said France had sold out in the face-off with the Americans for its own political gain.

"France will probably get the post of assistant secretary general, which up to now was Annan's post," it said.

Mr. Annan will become the seventh secretary general in U.N. history and the first from sub-Saharan Africa. He will also be the first secretary general to rise through U.N. ranks.

He takes up the $265,809 a year post Jan. 1, 1997. The perks of one of the world's toughest jobs include a town house overlooking the east river on New York's posh Upper East Side.

In a statement and in interviews after receiving the Security Council's nod, Mr. Annan said: "My highest priority will be to work with all member states to redefine the objectives of the organisation in the post-cold war world."

Aware of the shortcomings for which the middle-aged United Nations has been blamed, he said it was "time to agree on what the United Nations can and must do, and what it cannot do."

aid, are Russian-made Sagger anti-tank missiles that Hizbollah has been using against Israel over the past two months, the paper's unnamed sources said.

The shipments also include modified long-range Katyusha rockets capable of being launched from Lebanon and hitting as far south as Israel's third largest city, Haifa, according to Israeli intelligence reports in the United States.

U.S. officials have not verified that claim, the paper reported.

Shipments are now "very intense" and mark a significant increase in the supplies sent to Hizbollah since Israel's April offensive against the militia, a senior Pentagon official said.

Iran's military camps in Lebanon, run by about 200 Iranian revolutionary guards, appear to be offering training on the more advanced weapons, the paper reported. Hizbollah has shown proficiency with the Sagers, Pentagon officials said.

Iranian diplomats denied the charges. "Any allegations that Iran supplies Lebanese groups with arms are absolutely false," Hussein Nosrat, spokesman for the Iranian U.N. mission in New York, told the paper.

"The nature of our support to Lebanon is only humanitarian and moral support," he added.

United Nations resolution allowing Iraq to sell a limited amount of oil.

"Contrary to what the regime wanted to say, that the U.N. decision would negatively affect the opposition, the attack reflects continued displeasure over Saddam's rule," he said.

"It also is a reply to Arab calls for reconciliation with the Baghdad regime and shows that this person (Saddam) is not acceptable and that he will sooner or later fall," Mr. Samirani said.

U.N. sanctions, including a ban on Iraqi oil exports, were imposed after Iraqi troops invaded Kuwait in 1990. Iraq was expelled from Kuwait in 1991 by U.S.-led forces but the sanctions will stay in place until the country's weapons of mass destruction are dismantled.

Mr. Samirani said collaboration of people close to the government was necessary for such an attack to have been carried out.

Opposition sources said that authorities have detained more than 120 people after the attack on Uday.

Uday, the target of at least two other assassination attempts since the 1991 Gulf war, reportedly said from his hospital bed Friday that he was not seriously injured.

Witnesses in Al Mansour that few passersby who were found to be carrying arms were arrested and taken to a local police station.

The reports by the opposition could not be independently confirmed. The exact number of people detained — or if they continued to be held — was not clear.

Jordanian officials said the border with Iraq was closed for several hours Thursday, apparently to prevent any of the attackers from fleeing the country. Iraqi officials carefully searched cars and passengers crossing the border Friday.

Since the Gulf war, President Saddam has put key ministries and military units under the supervision of his sons, Uday and Qusai.

Uday unofficially runs the trade and information ministries, heads the Olympic Committee and owns a newspaper and a television station. Qusai is in charge of President Saddam's personal security and was recently put in charge of the army's elite Republican Guard Corps.

The increase in the power of the two sons followed the defection to Jordan in August 1995 of his two sons-in-law, who vowed to bring down his government from afar.

But the plans of Hussein Kamel and his brother Saddam Kamel fizzled and the two men were killed by family members after returning to Iraq in February.

The street where the attack on Uday took place was splattered with sheep's blood on Friday and thronged with Iraqis celebrating that Uday survived the attempt on his life.

Scores of sheep were slaughtered and the area where the assassination attempt took place was splattered in sheep's blood, a traditional sign that a had onen was dispelled.

Thousands of people gathered at the site while a brass band played the national anthem, women swayed to the tune and several people showered the crowd with chocolates and other sweets.

"The evil intentions of killing the symbol of Iraq's youth (Uday) have failed," said one man. "When conspiracies fail it is an occasion to celebrate," he said.

Reduction of customs duties on cars to take effect from beginning of 1997

By a Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Customs duties on cars will be reduced by 40 per cent with effect from Jan. 1, 1997, but it does not mean a decline in prices because the reduction will be made up in additional taxes, senior officials said Saturday.

The reduction in customs duties for cars comes in line with Jordan's internal moves to make the country's tariff structure more compatible with the requirements of a partnership agreement with the European Union (EU) and the Kingdom's accession to the World Trade Organisation (WTO).

Jordan and the EU will sign the partnership agreement in early 1997. The Kingdom has already started accession negotiations with the WTO, which, in essence, advocates tariff-free trade among its members.

Ministry of Planning Secretary-General Nabil Amman told a Rotary Club audience late Thursday that the move to reduce customs duties on cars would take effect on Jan. 1.

However, he added, an additional tax of equivalent rate will be imposed to make up for the loss of revenues for the treasury.

Commenting on the planned move, an official said Saturday that there would be several structures of the new customs tariffs on cars, "but the reduction will be roughly 40 per cent."

It was not immediately clear whether the new tariffs will follow the same line after a reduction in customs duties announced last year on the basis of the engine sizes of the vehicles.

The move was not unexpected. Planning Minister Rima Khalaf said early this year that customs duties on cars would be reduced but the additional tax would be imposed to make up for the loss of revenue.

Dr. Amman told the Rotary Club audience on Thursday that the government could not simply afford to lose the revenues from customs duties and it was imperative that the reduction had to be made up through the additional tax.

Several countries, including the U.S., are pressuring Jordan to revamp the customs duty structure on vehicles. They are demanding that the duties be set on an across-the-board basis rather than the present slab structure based on the engine size — meaning that cars with smaller-size engines pay a lower percentage while those with higher engine sizes will pay as high as 200 per cent.

In other comments, Dr. Amman also predicted that most Jordanian products would not be able to enter European markets immediately after the signing of the partnership agreement with the EU. The reason, he explained, local industries are not yet committed to specifications and standards and are unable to meet the terms required by the value added tax.

The planning ministry also reaffirmed the government's intention to sell its equity in commercial entities as part of its efforts to give the private sector the dominant role in the economy.

World Bank supports Jordan's reforms with $120 million loan

WASHINGTON (Special) — The World Bank board has approved a $120 million loan to support reforms currently being undertaken by Jordan to integrate the economy more fully into the world market. The second economic reform and development loan is backing reforms that target increased competition and exports, a modern financial system, best-practice business laws and privatisation.

An important component of Jordan's reform strategy is the creation of an enabling legal environment for business. A new securities law, recently approved by the Cabinet, will create a modern Security Exchange Commission with authority to regulate the stock exchange and securities market. The Amman Securities Exchange and the Amman Depository Company will be private sector owned and fully computerised within the next 18 months. The Jordanian government is also working on new legislation to establish a market for leasing and secured financing.

The government is pushing ahead with its trade reforms. In addition to continued tariff reduction and streamlining of customs, it has undertaken two important steps toward facilitating trade: A fast-track channel for imports used for export production, and a voluntary pre-shipment valuation scheme.

The privatisation programme supports private sector participation in infrastructure investments. Shares in the Telecommunications Corporation and Jordan Cement Factories are slated to be sold to domestic and foreign investors. Jordan Electricity Authority has been incorporated and its two subsidiaries divested. Private sector concessions and BOO/BOT (Build-Operate-Own/Build-Operate-Transfer) schemes are planned for the transport sector.

The bank loan is for 17 years, including a four-year grace period at the bank's standard variable rate.

IMF foresees Egyptian GDP growing six per cent a year by decade end

CAIRO (R) — Egypt's economy will grow at least six per cent a year by the turn of the century if the government continues to liberalise trade and privatisation the public sector, an International Monetary Fund (IMF) official has said.

Howard Handy from the IMF's Middle East Department told a news conference that inflation will also fall to about five per cent a month from current levels of above seven per cent once the fund-backed reform programme is realised.

"Egypt is making impressive progress on the economic front and I firmly believe our projections are pessimistic. Once the circle of reforms gets moving, it will have a very considerable impact on the economy," Mr. Handy said.

The deal envisages reforms including privatisation, trade liberalisation, deregulation, greater private sector involvement in the financial system and modernisation of the fiscal system.

According to central bank statistics, Egypt's gross domestic product (GDP) growth for the 1996/97 financial year, which started in July, will be five per cent, just over twice the population growth rate. Growth for 1995/96 was 4.9 per cent.

And although the state managed to bring down inflation to a record low of 4.9 per cent for the year, ending November 1995, consumer prices have climbed since then, reaching 7.6 per cent in the year to August 1996, official statistics said.

Independent sources estimate inflation is at least three per cent higher.

For the past three years, the government with IMF help has tried to restructure its ailing public-sector dominated economy. The state began implementing the reforms in earnest since it appointed in January an economically-oriented cabinet.

The new team, led by Prime Minister Kamal Ganzouri, has so far cut tariffs by up to 25 per cent and promised to privatise more than 30 per cent of state-owned firms by mid-1998.

The reforms have prompted the fund to sign with Egypt a standby credit deal which will allow Cairo to withdraw about $200 million a year — an offer which Egypt, flush with ample reserves at $185 billion, has declined to cash in on.

The agreement has, however, convinced international creditors to scrap Egypt's last tranche of $4 billion official debt.

Mr. Handy said Egypt was on the way to implementing the IMF reforms which ultimately boil down to boosting savings and investment which will in turn stimulate growth.

"Savings and investments are the building blocks of economic growth. Domestic investment is currently at less than 18 per cent of GDP which is not high enough to sustain high growth.

"Investment can be funded by increased saving and the extra revenue will come from the privatisation programme and updating the fiscal sector," Mr. Handy added.

Public banks slashing their share in joint venture institutions was one way to modernise the monetary side which the government has already implemented. Mr. Handy said.

The state could also consider issuing longer term treasury bills (currently at three and six months) and privatising the state's cash-intensive pension scheme.

Egypt hopes its reform programme would not only increase domestic investment but lure foreign funds as well. Last month, IMF resident representative Arvind Subramanian told Reuters Egypt had since April drawn up to $400 million in investment.

Officials have said they expect next week's Middle East economic summit will also polish Egypt's investment potential.

HOROSCOPE FORECAST FOR SUNDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1996

By Thomas S. Pierson, Astrologer, Carroll Righter Foundation

ARIES: (March 21 to April 19) A period of meditation with your mate today can solve some difficulty between you, so keep the lines of communication open. Keep promises you have made to others and thereby maintain your good reputation.

TAURUS: (April 20 to May 20) Think over public affairs well today and determine what career activities need to be accelerated. This is a good day later tonight to have long talks with fellow business associates and resolve any difficulties.

GEMINI: (May 21 to June 21) Study every detail of the tasks you have taken on today and make the best of your efforts to complete them. Contact a fellow associate and come to an understanding upon what steps are necessary to complete your tasks.

MOON CHILDREN: (June 22 to July 21) Get together with congenial friends today and enjoy usual pleasures which are not too expensive and can provide everyone involved with some pleasant time. Later tonight seek out the advice of knowledgeable people who can help.

LEO: (July 22 to August 21) Take care today you do not lose your temper at home, though tempted, and avoid a fierce disagreement with those who live under your roof. This evening can be spent with close friends and have a wonderful time together.

VIRGO: (August 22 to September 22) Study into ways today to become more successful and happy with your career activities and you will get noticed by those in authority. Don't try to force your idea or there could be great difficulty.

LIBRA: (September 23 to October 22) You are worrying about your financial status today, however, don't do anything hasty which you could regret in the days ahead. Later this evening will be good for you to consult with business advisors and generate a plan of action.

SCORPIO: (October 23 to November 21) Deep contemplation today can show you the best plan of action to follow in the days ahead for you to realize the success which you seek. Later this evening make the effort to consult with a bigwig and use what is discussed.

SAGITTARIUS: (November 22 to December 21) This is a good day today to get accumulated small tasks behind you so you can move on to important matters concerning career activities. Later this evening you can meet with fellow associates and complete any new project.

CAPRICORN: (December 22 to January 20) Women can be especially thoughtful today and make life brighter for others, so make the effort to be kind to your loved ones or fellow associates. Later this evening you can get together with close friends for some fun.

AQUARIUS: (January 21 to February 19) Use your energies today to solve outside affairs which need your attention. Try to stay at home tonight and relax with your loved ones, for in the days ahead you could meet up with some resistance concerning career activities.

PISCES: (February 20 to March 20) Meditation and philosophical studies can bring fine results in the days ahead if you apply yourself. This evening you can seek out those in authority and discuss your progress with some assistance of fellow associates.

Birthstone of December: Turquoise — Zircon.

Japan faces improved Kuwait on course to retain Asian Cup

ABU DHABI (AFP) — Defending Asian Cup champions Japan will have to give a better performance than they did against China in the group matches when they face Kuwait in the quarter-finals on Sunday if they hope to retain the title.

South Korea made the mistake of underestimating the Kuwaitis and it very nearly cost them a place in the tournament's final stages, two Kuwaiti second-half goals doing the damage.

The defeat left South Korea hoping and praying that their four group points would be enough. It was, but only thanks to a last day win by Japan over China.

The Japanese waited until the 90th minute before they broke the scoreless deadlock. They also waited until the final five minutes against Syria before scoring twice to snatch victory. And it is their ability to continue to battle right to the end that should see them succeed over Kuwait.

The Kuwaitis, trying to rediscover their glory years of the 80's when they won the Asian Cup and qualified for the World Cup finals, have tended to fade in the final 15 minutes. After taking a 2-0 first half lead they collapsed against hosts United Arab Emirates in the group matches to go down 3-2.

Claims afterwards of dirty tricks by UAE officials could not change the fact that they had thrown away a comfortable lead.

South Korea, in the other side of the quarter-final draw, face a tough test against an Iran side that has impressed several European coaches here.

"They are very solid. A very impressive side that could surprise a lot of people," remarked one European coach.

The Saudi's were certainly impressed, Iran beat them and won the group.

The South Korean's main threat will come from defender Naeim Sadavi, whose attacks up the right side before crossing, usually to Ali Daei, have already caused plenty of problems for opponents. South Korea is traditionally a slow starter, picking up the pace as the competition continues, but this time they have looked sluggish and out of form — going backwards instead of forward.

Even their win over no-hopers Indonesia failed to impress.

Coach Park Jong Hwan blames his players' tough season in the Korean league.

"They are tired," he repeated after each group match. Well they have had five days rest since their last match so tiredness should not be a problem against Iran.

Saudi Arabia, who if the form book holds true should meet the Koreans in the semi-final, face China.

The Chinese have been through an emotional roller coaster in the past two days.

Heartbreak when they crashed to Japan in the dying seconds of their final group match. With only three points it looked like they were out of the cup and on their way back to Beijing.

But Uzbekistan, would only needed a draw against Syria to top China and go into the quarter-finals in their first ever Asian Cup, went down 2-1 and suddenly China were back in the championships.

But a trip beyond the quarter-finals seems highly unlikely. The Saudis, two times champions, should be simply too strong and skillful for them.

The UAE take on Iraq which should be the battle of the round. The UAE stumbled into the quarter finals while Iraq, like Korea, got through by taking one of the last two available spots. One thing is sure — neither side will be taking any prisoners.

Organisers are privately hoping that UAE and Japan go into the semi-final. Should Iraq and Kuwait both win the Asian Football Confederation (AFC) will face the prospect of having only one semi-final.

Kuwait has made it clear that they will not play against Iraq under any circumstances.

If the worse does happen the Asian Cup, the showcase of Asian football, will be reduced to a farce.

AMMAN — A striking 11-0 win by Al Faisali over Al Qoqazi and a last minute goal that tied Al Ramtha 1-1 with Al Wihdat helped Al Faisali move up to the first place in the Kingdom's Premier League Soccer Championship.

Both Al Faisali and Al Wihdat now have 37 points, but Al Faisali leads on goal difference.

Al Faisali's Jerius Tadrus, who scored five of his team's 11 goals, secured his position as the league top scorer with 13 goals.

A last minute goal by Al Ramtha's Khaled Aggouri made Al Wihdat lose its position atop the standings to its arch-rival Al Faisali with only two weeks remaining for declaring the 1996 league champion. Nevertheless, both teams will face each other in the final week, thus making it difficult to predict the winner.

In other matches, Al Hussein disappointed their fans after a tie with lowly Shabab Al Hussein 2-2 and Al Ahli re-forced their position in the last match ending the 16th week after a 3-1 win over Qadisiyah.

Euro '96 winners voted Germany's team of the year

BONN (R) — Bertie Vogts's Euro '96-winning soccer players were named Germany's team of the year at an awards ceremony on Friday while decathlete Frank Busemann and Alpine skier Katja Seizinger were chosen as the sports personalities of 1996.

More than 1,200 sports journalists took part in the annual poll for Germany's most prestigious sports awards ceremony, held this year in the western town of Ludwigsburg. Borussia Dortmund defender Steffen Freund, out of action because of injury, picked up the award on behalf of the soccer side, who were in Lisbon preparing for their World Cup qualifier against Portugal on Saturday.

Busemann sprang to the German public's attention by winning a silver medal at the Atlanta Olympics in only his fifth decathlon competition. Seizinger was the 1995-96 women's overall World Cup

Navratilova named U.S. Fed Cup captain for 1997

NEW YORK (R) — Retired tennis great Martina Navratilova on Friday was named to succeed Billie Jean King as captain of the 1997 United States Fed Cup team.

Navratilova was appointed for next year with the understanding that King may return to the post in 1998, in-coming U.S. Tennis Association President Harry Marmion announced.

"I only signed on for the year, and that's all I was asked for," said Navratilova via telephone from Tampa, where she is playing in the Team Tennis finals this weekend. "When I was presented with the opportunity I couldn't say no."

King voluntarily stepped down after guiding the United States to the Fed Cup title with a 5-0 victory over Spain in the final in September. It was the 15th Fed Cup title for the Americans, but first since 1990.

"It is clear that Billie Jean may want to come back, the players may want her to come back," Marmion said. "I may have to name co-captains if Martina wins it."

Navratilova, perhaps the most successful competitor in Fed Cup history, said she would have no problem returning the captaincy to her close friend and former coach after the 1997 campaign.

"Billie Jean was here first and it's up to her to decide," said the nine-time Wimbledon champion. "I would certainly give Billie Jean King first crack."

Navratilova holds a remarkable 37-0 record in Fed Cup singles and doubles play. The Czech-born U.S. citizen is the only player ever to have won the cup playing for two different nations.

Navratilova played on the 1975 championship Czech team and combined with Chris Evert to bring the Federation Cup to the Martina Navratilova United States in 1982, 1986 and 1989.

"Everytime I played it was a special occasion," recalled Navratilova, who said she was eagerly anticipating the chance to help her adopted country defend the title.

"I think I can really help teach the women a thing or two about the game," Navratilova said. "I love teaching on any level. It is going to be real pleasure to work with these champions."

Navratilova's first assignment as U.S. captain will be to enlist players for the first round in the Netherlands in March.

Lebanon emerging host to Asia cup

ABU DHABI (AP) — Lebanon, on its way to recovery after a 15-year civil war that ruined most of the country, is emerging as the choice to host the next Asia Cup in 2000. Asian soccer officials said Saturday. "There will be voting as there are other contenders, but Lebanon is a clear favorite," said an Asian Football Confederation official, speaking on condition of anonymity. The 16-member AFC executive committee will vote on Dec. 20, a day before the final of the 12-nation Asia Cup. China, Malaysia and South Korea are the other contenders. Lebanon's chances to get the majority vote improved with the seven Arab members of the AFC executive committee deciding to back it. AFC sources said. The Arab members held a meeting Friday in Abu Dhabi, the venue for the final of the Asia Cup, and decided to back Lebanon. India and Sri Lanka are also likely to vote for Lebanon. A multimillion dollar programme to rebuild the country is underway. Before the turn of the century, officials say, there will be luxury hotels and a new downtown Beirut in the rubble of what was once the Middle East's commercial centre.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan Telecommunications Regulatory Commission

The Telecommunications Regulatory Commission (TRC) of Jordan announces that it has released a Call for Tenders for two national public payphone licences.

Following consultation with the industry, the TRC issued the Call for Tenders dated December 14, 1996 (TRC Call 1996-2), which sets out the process that the TRC will follow in awarding the new licences. The process consists of two phases. During the first phase, a special tender evaluation committee will review the technical aspects of the submissions from all applicants. Those applicants who successfully pass this phase will participate in the second phase, in which their sealed financial proposals will be opened at a meeting of all qualifying applicants. Parties interested in applying for the payphone licences may obtain a copy of the Call for Tenders from the TRC upon payment of JD1,500 before January 14, 1997. The deadline for the submission of applications is March 16, 1997.

Zamalek land African Cup for record 4th time

CAIRO (R) — Zamalek of Egypt lifted a record fourth African Champions' Cup on Friday when they beat Nigerian Shooting Stars of Nigeria 5-4 on penalties in the final.

The Egyptian side, trailing 2-1 after the first leg in Ibadan, Nigeria, two weeks ago, won the second leg 2-1 in front of a hysterical 80,000 crowd to make it 3-3 on aggregate and force the penalty shoot-out.

Zamalek had seemed to be on course for a clear-cut win after going 2-0 up but a lapse in concentration in the dying stages allowed Stars to draw level on aggregate as substitute Gbenga Okunowo steaked a last-minute goal for the outclassed Nigerians at the end of a bruising encounter.

When the final went immediately into spot-kicks — African competitions do not allow for extra time in an aggregate draw — both teams scored four out of their five regulation penalties before Ossama Nabil put Zamalek 5-4 ahead.

Stars' substitute Ademola Johnson then blasted the ball against the underside of the bar, and saw it bounce out to give Zamalek victory.

Knowing a 1-0 win would be enough to secure the cup on the away goal rules, Zamalek attacked from the outset and twice hit the woodwork before defender Mehdi Abdelhadi curled a close-range shot into the net in the 27th minute.

Stars had David Ogaga, who had only been on the pitch for 22 minutes, sent off in the 60th minute for a crude foul in midfield and Zamalek looked to have sealed the win six minutes later when Tarek Mustapha beat oncoming goalkeeper Abiodun Baruwa and centred perfectly for Ayman Mansour to head into an empty net.

The Cairo aristocrats could well have increased their 2-0 lead had Algerian international Kamel Kaci said not squandered two gilt-edge chances and they almost paid the price when Okunowo slammed home for Stars to silence the boisterous crowd.

Visiting Nigerians fans were pelted throughout the game by locals in the terraces above them and later set upon by riot police, who chased them out of the stadium.

Baggio set to leave AC Milan after row with coach Saachi

ROME (AFP) — World Cup star Roberto Baggio was set to leave AC Milan after a row with coach Arrigo Sacchi, according to an Italian press report on Saturday.

Sports daily Corriere Della Sport claimed Baggio was packing his bags and would no longer play for the five-times European Cup winners.

Sacchi, two weeks into his new job after coaching the national side, has been at loggerheads with the former FIFA Footballer of the Year ever since the striker's penalty miss in a shoot-out handed Brazil the 1994 World Cup title.

An irritated Sacchi replied dryly: "If I play with two strikers you have a chance of playing, but if I play just one attacker, you have no chance."

Club General Manager Silvano Ranaicini was present at the dispute and backed Sacchi, saying cuttingly to Baggio: "It's not fair to steal money from Berlusconi." The striker turned on his heels and left the training to return home.

Ravanelli to stay at Middlesbrough

MIDDLESBROUGH (AFP) — Middlesbrough's Italian striker Fabrizio Ravanelli Friday rubbished reports that he wants to leave the struggling Premiership club.

The 28-year-old, who has been linked with a move to a number of English and Italian clubs including Manchester United and Inter Milan, also revealed that he is suing a paper that quoted him as wanting to desert the club just months after his arrival from Juventus.

"I want to tell all Boro fans that, despite moving to a new club and a new country, I could not have hoped to have settled in better in the few months I have been on Teesside," he said. "The club, the supporters and all the people of Teesside have made me feel extremely welcome and I want to thank them by doing well for Middlesbrough. There is no way I want to leave the club."

Ravanelli has also revealed that he has issued high court proceedings for libel against the Daily Mirror over articles published about him earlier in December.

Ravanelli, the club's leading scorer with 16 goals, said: "I have read a number of articles in the British press which attributed comments to me which have been without any

Miller leads Indiana Pacers past Boston Celtics with buzzer-beater

INDIANAPOLIS (R) — Reggie Miller drained a three-point buzzer-beater to lift the Pacers to a 97-94 victory over the Boston Celtics on Friday, ending Indiana's three-game losing streak.

With the game apparently headed for overtime, Miller took an inbound pass from Vincent Askew with 1.2 seconds left, turned around and released his shot with just one-tenth of a second on the clock. The ball swished through the net as the final buzzer sounded.

"I told Vince after the time-out to look for me," Miller said. "I think he saw I was wide open and he made a great pass. I got a great look. I couldn't ask for a better look."

Miller, the Pacers' go-to guy at crunch time, finished with 25 points, including 15 in the final period.

"He stepped up and hit the big one," Boston coach M.L. Carr said of Miller. "I thought we did a good job on him in the first half. He hit the big shot at the end."

Derrick McKey contributed 17 points, seven rebounds and seven assists as the Pacers erased a seven-point third-quarter deficit with a season-best 35-point fourth quarter.

David Wesley scored 18 points, Eric Williams added 17 and nine rebounds and Dim Radja scored 14 points for Boston.

At Los Angeles, Shaquille O'Neal scored eight of his 34 points in overtime, including a go-ahead layup with 16 seconds left, to give the Lakers to a 120-119 victory over the Portland Trail Blazers.

O'Neal, who blocked a shot with 1.4 seconds remaining, had 10 rebounds, seven assists and six blocks as the Lakers won for the ninth time in their last 11 games.

At New Jersey, Michael Jordan scored 22 of his 32 points in the first half as the Chicago Bulls opened a 27-point lead and cruised to a 113-92 victory over the Nets.

Scottie Pippen scored 24 points and Ron Harper added 12 for the Bulls, who won without suspended forward Dennis Rodman and injured centre Luc Longley to improve to 19-3.

Robert Pack scored 25 points to lead the Nets, who played without forward Jayson Williams, who currently leads the NBA in rebounding but sat out with a sprained thumb.

The hot-shooting Bulls led 62-40 at intermission and were up by at least 18 points the rest of the way.

At Washington, Chris Webber had 25 points and 11 rebounds and Jaren Jackson hit a crucial three-pointer with 30 seconds left to lead the Bulls past the Denver Nuggets, 108-104.

Juwan Howard added 22 points and Rod Strickland chipped in 18 points and 12 assists for the Bulls.

Dale Ellis had 22 points and Mark Jackson added 15 and dished out 18 assists for the floundering Nuggets, who have dropped nine straight and 13 of their last 14 games.

At Minnesota, Tom Gugliotta scored 12 of his 25 points in the fourth quarter and drilled a jumper from the corner with 16 seconds left as the Timberwolves snapped a six-game losing streak with a 108-105 victory over the Phoenix Suns.

Stephon Marbury had 21 points and 10 assists, Doug West added 15 points and Sam Mitchell contributed 13 for Minnesota, which beat Phoenix for just the third time in 30 meetings.

In Charlotte, Glen Rice scored five of his 24 points on free throws in the final two minutes and five different players hit layups in a decisive 10-2 fourth-quarter run as the Hornets beat the Philadelphia 76ers 84-75.

Charlotte, which got 20 points and 11 rebounds from Vlade Divac, posted its fourth straight win and sent the Sixers to their sixth consecutive defeat. Anthony Mason chipped in 13 points and 13 rebounds for Charlotte.

In Cleveland, Bobby Sura scored 22 points, including four in a decisive fourth-quarter run, and Tyrone Hill added 20 as the Cavaliers rolled past the Golden State Warriors riors, who have not beaten the Cavs since 1992.

In Vancouver, Bryant Reeves scored 27 points and rookie Shareef Abdul-Ruhim added 21 points, and 11 rebounds as the Grizzlies snapped a three-game losing streak with a 95-93 victory

Turkish referees want more protection

ISTANBUL (R) — Turkish soccer referees on Friday appealed to the interior and justice ministries and the police for more protection against violent fans.

Osmun Aveli, general secretary of the Aelive Soccer Referees and Observers Association, said in one recent incident three officials were hospitalized after they were beaten in the street following an amateur match in the eastern city of Erzurum.

Executive members of Erzurum amateur sports clubs were allegedly among the attackers.

"This happens at every level — at school fixtures the sports teacher beats the referee. Everyone is stressed," said Aveli.

He said politicians — tangled in a recent scandal over ties between the state, police and underworld — and club administrators had been making fiery statements which increased public aggression.

"This has to be stopped before there is a tragedy," Aveli said.

One referee is suing the chairman and executive board of a club for attacking him after a match in the central town of Kirikkale.

Another referee and his assistants were recovering in hospital in the western town of Aydin from blows inflicted by a police team after he dismissed two players.

Senate seeks to revamp its role in democracy

Upper House to hold special session to discuss amendments to internal statutes

By Tareq Momani
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — The Upper House of Parliament (Senate) on Saturday agreed to hold a special session to study the subject of amending its internal regulations with the purpose of promoting its role in the democratisation process in Jordan.

During a session chaired by Senate Speaker Ahmad Lawzi and attended by the Council of Ministers, the senators discussed a proposal by Senator Rajai Muasher calling for a re-examination of the Senate internal by-laws and the role of the Senate.

Dr. Muasher has also called for stimulating the activities of the Senate so that its role can be more effective.

Senators' views on the subject ranged from demands that these matters be discussed secretly to call for open sessions.

Some of the senators proposed the formation of a special committee to be entrusted with the task of introducing amendment to the by-laws and submitting a draft to the Senate for debate, while others said that such a task must be given to the Senate's Law Committee.

The majority of senators wanted the session to be closed because the subjects on the agenda are of paramount importance. They said in a closed session this subject could be discussed in full and more effectively.

At the end of the Senate agreed on amending the internal regulations and Mr. Lawzi announced that he will call for a special session to deal with the subject next week.

Senators who were involved in the discussion on the issue included Ahmad Tarawneh, Taher Hikmat, Saeed Al Tal, Kamal Al Shaer, Thouqan Hindawi, Jawad Anani, Zeid Rifai, Ma'n Abu Nowar, Laila Sharaf, Abdul Latif Arabiyat, Kamel Abu Jaber, Nabeer Rashid and Salem Masaadeh.

The Senate also referred to its Law Committee a draft law on Jerash Municipal Court and to the Finance Committee a draft amendment to the banks law. It also endorsed a financial protocol between Jordan and France under which France will grant Jordan assistance worth 100 million francs ($20 million) to help it carry out developmental projects. Of this amount 10 million francs ($2 million) will be granted and the rest will come in the form of a loan which will be paid over 20 years with interest at the rate of one per cent with a seven year grace period.

The 10-million-franc grant will be used to finance a study on water projects for Mafrag and for the southern Jordan Valley, and another study on the treatment of solid waste and the development of Amman airport.

The 90 million franc loan will be used to finance the expansion of the grain silo in Irbid, boost the capacity of the waste water treatment plant in Baqaa and develop the radar centre at Amman airport.

The Senate endorsed an amendment to the penal code which stipulates that a person will be imprisoned between one and two years and will pay a JD100-200 fine if he/she commits any of the following violations:

A. Issuing a cheque without sufficient deposit.

B. Withdrawing balance after issuing the cheque.

C. Instructing the bank to refrain from cashing a cheque in violation of the given rules.

D. Endorsing a cheque to another person while knowing that it will not be honoured.

E. Issuing a cheque in a manner that it could not be cashed.

The Senate also returned to the Lower House a draft amendment to a law on civil courts after introducing some amendments.

At the Lower House, the Finance and Economic Committee Saturday continued its examination of the 1997 fiscal budget which was presented to the House last month.

The session was attended by the ministers of finance, health and supply and the heads of Jordan Pharmacists Association and the Consumer Protection Society.

After completing its debate of the draft budget, the committee will submit it to the House with its recommendations.

In a statement after the meeting, the committee chairman, Abed Mousa Nahar, said that the committee reviewed with Health Minister Aref Bataineh his ministry's activities and services and raising the standard of these services in public hospitals and health centres.

The committee looked into the subject of health insurance for various sectors of the public and the steps being taken by the Health Ministry to introduce a comprehensive national health insurance system for all Jordanians.

Mr. Nahar said the committee underlined the need for the Ministry of Health to ensure the availability of medicines and promote local production of pharmaceutical products.

He said the committee reviewed with Dr. Bataineh his ministry's plans for new hospitals and discussed with Minister of Supply Munir Sobar the general supply situation in the Kingdom and the distribution of cash subsidy for bread and the control of prices.

The committee plans to meet Sunday to finalise discussion of the draft budget. It will be meeting with the ministers of finance and social development and the directors of the National Aid Fund and the Employment and Development Fund as well as the director of the Social Security Corporation.

Students demand PNA free PFLP activists

NABLUS (Agencies) —

Hundreds of Palestinian students protested in Nablus on Saturday against a Palestinian National Authority (PNA) crackdown on a radical group that claimed responsibility for the killing of two Jewish settlers. "We reject the political arrests and we demand the authority release those who were arrested," a student leader of Palestinian President Yasser Arafat's Fateh faction told the rally at Al Najah University in the West Bank city.

Palestinian security forces detained scores of activists of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) after the group said it carried out the shooting near self-ruled Ramallah on Wednesday, the PFLP said.

Student activists told the rally five students from Bir Zeit University were among those arrested. Israel has demanded a crackdown.

"All respect to those who executed the heroic operation," read a sign at Saturday's protest, reflecting Palestinian anger at Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's decision on Friday to give financial incentives for Jewish settlement in the occupied West Bank.

Palestinian police barred the PFLP from holding a protest rally in self-ruled Bethlehem on Saturday, PFLP members said.

The Damascus-based PFLP opposes Israeli-Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) peace accords that set up limited Palestinian autonomy in parts of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"We are angry at the cancellation of this rally. Our boys were arrested many times in Israeli jails and we hope these jails will not now be used for pure nationalists," one activist, who did not want to be named, told Reuters.

In Damascus, the PFLP also called on Mr. Arafat to free the militants arrested after the drive-by shooting.

The PFLP asks the Palestinian (National) Authority, which has arrested more than 27 of its militants, to free them immediately, spokesman Maher Taher said.

A PFLP statement cited as a cause for the attack an Israeli plan to build the first Jewish homes inside a Palestinian neighbourhood of East Jerusalem since the sector was occupied by Israel in 1967.

Seventeen were arrested on Thursday and another 10 early Friday, including Mahmoud Fannun, a member of the Palestinian National Council, which is the PLO's highest body.

Israeli commitment to agreements key to success of peace process — key message of AKM conference

Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Only if Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's government keeps up with the commitments the state of Israel has signed with the Palestinians and respects the land-for-peace principle as upheld by U.N. Security Council Resolution 242 the peace process will survive. This was the message conveyed by participants in a three-day international conference on "And What if the Middle East Peace process fails?" as they left Amman on Saturday.

Though feelings ranging from discouragement to pessimism and appeals to definitely break the already slowed-down Arab-Israeli negotiations were expressed, "we all agreed that the peace process is in a severe crisis," said Jordan's representative to the symposium Kamel Abu Jaber.

"My own analysis is that the election of Netanyahu has put the entire peace process in question," said Dr. Abu Jaber, who is also a member of the Upper House of Parliament and former foreign minister.

In an interview with the Jordan Times over the major outcomes of the conference, Dr. Abu Jaber joined other participants in strong criticism of the hard-line policies of the Netanyahu government, widely considered at the conference as responsible for the logjam in the Arab-Israeli negotiations and a possible cause of failure of the peace process.

The autumn meeting of the Academy of the Kingdom of Morocco (AKM) started Tuesday and was convened in Amman upon the invitation of His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan and the endorsement of King Hassan of Morocco.

As the AKM does not publish deliberations, its meetings end with "a simple accumulation of interventions."

However, "the Amman conference reiterated the principles on which the Arab stand (in the peace negotiations) is based," said Mohammed Tajeddine Hussein, professor of international law and director of the Centre for Strategic Studies at the Rabat-based Mohammad V University.

Dr. Hussein said the key-points in the Arab stand vis-a-vis the peace process include the reiteration of the land-for-peace formula, respect for the aspirations of the Palestinian people and their right to establish an independent state with Jerusalem as its capital, and the demand for Israel's withdrawal from all the territories occupied during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

"Mr. Netanyahu is trying to replace the land-for-peace principle with a so-called security-for-peace formula," said Dr. Hussein. But this will provoke a new intifada and new wars, he said.

More than 20 papers analysing all possible causes and scenarios in case of failure of the peace process were presented at the AKM meeting, hosted by the Royal Academy for Islamic Civilisation Research Al al Bait Foundation.

Baghdad appears to be normal after attack on Uday Hussein

Dawa Al Islamiya claims responsibility for ambush

BAGHDAD (Agencies) —

Life in the Iraqi capital appeared normal on Saturday, with no sign of any unusual security measures two days after Saddam Hussein's eldest son Uday survived an assassination attempt in the heart of Baghdad.

An official newspaper said Baghdad would not succumb to plots against it, after the gun attack on Uday.

"Iraq will not yield to conspiracies and will not stop its path to progress," the Bahel newspaper, which is run by Uday, said in an editorial.

It said Thursday's attack on Uday, 33, had "stolen the joy" of Iraqi people after Baghdad began pumping oil this week for the first time in six years in an easing of U.N. sanctions imposed after Iraq's August 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

"Iraqis resisted a coalition of 30 countries (during the 1991 Gulf war) and endured an embargo of more than six years. This cowardly act will only strengthen their resistance," the newspaper said.

Uday was shot and wounded in an ambush on Thursday evening while he was driving his car in the wealthy Al Mansour district of central Baghdad.

His condition was described on Thursday as not giving cause for concern.

Palestinian President Yasser Arafat sent a message to President Saddam expressing hope for Uday, the official Iraqi News Agency (INA) said Saturday.

"While thanking God for having saved your son from this cowardly act, we wish for him to recover from his injuries and express to you our fraternal solidarity with the Iraqi people," Mr. Arafat said.

An outlawed Iraqi Shiite Muslim party, Al Daawa Al Islamiya, said in a statement received in Beirut on Saturday that it was responsible for the attack.

"A group of our heroic strugglers...inflicted the verdict of God and the people unto the enemy of God and the people, Uday Saddam Al Tikriti, who has caused mischief and crime in the land, like his dictator father," the party said in a statement faxed to an international news agency in Beirut.

The group said in the statement dated Dec. 12 that its fighters "besieged (Uday's) motorcade at Al Mansour market in Baghdad on Thursday afternoon and fired a hail of bullets, wounding him several times, so he escaped from a certain death." Iraq's former intelligence chief said he believed the assassination attempt was carried out by an opposition group and not by members of Baghdad's ruling inner circle.

Wafiq Al Samerai told Reuters he did not know who tried to kill Uday, but that such an attack had long been planned by a group of Iraqi-based former members of the ruling Baath Party, the Unified Democratic Front (UDF).

"According to information I had when I was in Iraq and in additional data I got after leaving the country the (UDF) front was observing Uday's movements in particular at Al Mansour district where he was attacked and was planning to kill him," Mr. Samerai said.

The former intelligence chief, who fled Iraq in 1994, said the attack would encourage other attempts "because the regime could not impose more strict security measures than those implemented now."

Eyewitnesses said at least two gunmen attacked Uday's car, injuring the man widely seen as successor to his father, Iraq's official media on Friday said an investigation was underway.

Mr. Samerai said the attack would have a strong impact on the opposition in Iraq because it came after the implementation of the Father, daughter win $9 million

TOULON (AFP) — A father and daughter who played the lottery separately in different towns in the south of France ended up sharing the jackpot, raking in a total of 44 million francs (nearly $9 million) on Friday the 13th. Bastien Bonhoure, 75, a former gendarme, heard the news from his daughter Paulette, 48, a civil servant. "We'd both played the same numbers for about 10 years," he said, adding that they each won 22,321,450 francs. A nephew of Paul Bonhoure, the first national lottery winner in 1933, Bastien said his entire lotto win would be split into nine parts among all the members of his family.

Charles slams all things modern

LONDON (R) — Prince Charles has lashed out at materialism, science and other scourges of modern life, saying Britain treated tradition like a "socially unacceptable disease." He said: "Modern materialism, in my humble opinion, is unbalanced and increasingly damaging in its long-term consequences." "Science has tried to assume a monopoly, even a tyranny, over our understanding," Scientist had tried to take over the natural world from God with "sombre and horrifying" consequences, he said, citing the recent outbreak of so-called mad cow disease in Britain. "We are only now beginning to gauge the disastrous results of this outlook...Indeed, tradition is positively discriminated against — as if it were some socially unacceptable disease." The Times published an extract from a speech the prince delivered to a private meeting of executives, academics, civil servants and religious leaders. Prince Charles — a practising Anglican — also urged the West to learn from Islam and adopt a more holistic approach to life.

Canadian couple get 12 gifts from secret Santa

TORONTO (R) — Twelve drummers drumming arrived this week on the doorstep of an elderly Canadian couple, capping a 12-year saga in which they received the gifts of the 12 days of Christmas "from distant locales. The tale began in 1985 when Mary and Stanley Grandish of Edmonton, Alberta, discovered a stuffed partridge in their backyard pear tree. "We thought that was the end of it and then the second year it kept on and on and we got parcels from Australia, from Germany, from Switzerland, from Ontario and Alberta, all different places," said Mary Grandish, 80. The anonymous gifts, which came in the order outlined in the traditional verse and song, included six white satin geese mailed from Germany, seven silver napkin holders shaped like swans from Australia and eight tiny maids, all a-milling stuffed felt cows from wildwood, Alberta. Each gift arrived from a different city, with no return address and few clues about the sender.

French Snow White wins damages from Walt Disney

PARIS (R) — A French court ordered the Walt Disney Company to compensate an actress for not paying her video and record royalties for her work dubbing the film Snow White into French. Lucie Dolene, 66, who sang the French version of the song "One Day My Prince Will Come," told a Paris court the company had "stolen her voice." She was awarded a provisional 130,000 francs ($22,000). She had demanded half a million francs ($100,000) in damages under a 1985 French law protecting artists' copyrights. Lawyers for the Walt Disney Company said the terms of Dolene's hiring in 1958 allowed for later use of her voice.

South Lebanon quiet after mystery Katyusha attack

BEIRUT (R) — Israel said Katyusha rockets fired from inside Lebanon for the first time in eight months hit northern Israel, but the origin of the Friday night attack remained a mystery and South Lebanon was quiet on Saturday.

The attack was the first breach of an April 26 ceasefire understanding in South Lebanon that banned attacks on civilian areas by Israeli forces and guerrillas trying to oust them from Lebanon.

The pro-Iranian Hizbollah (Party of God), which leads the resistance against Israel, denied firing the Katyushas and three Palestinian guerrilla groups contacted by Reuters also denied involvement.

The attack caused concern in Beirut because it took place three days before a "friends of Lebanon" donors' conference in Washington on Monday at which Lebanon hopes to raise up to $5 billion to help finance its post-civil war reconstruction.

Prime Minister Rafik Al Hariri and other officials will argue at the conference that the government has restored stability and worked hard in the past four years to set the country on the road to recovery.

U.N. sources in South Lebanon said peacekeeping troops from the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) were looking for the site from which the highly mobile Katyushas were fired, but overnight rain had probably washed away traces of the launching.

The sources said both UNIFIL and Lebanese army troops heard two bangs during the night in the vicinity of Qlaieh, a village near the coast south of Tyre, about 10 kilometres north of the Israeli border.

Qlaieh is not far from the Palestinian refugee camp of Rashidiyeh and the sources said guerrillas there could launch Katyushas.

A Hizbollah official in Beirut told Reuters: "we the Islamic resistance deny firmly that we have launched any Katyusha rockets on Friday."

The Israeli army said Katyusha rockets hit the western Galilee region of northern Israel at about 8 p.m. There were no reports of casualties or damage, it said.

An Israeli army spokesman said the attack was a blunt violation of the ceasefire understandings. Israeli guns shelled the Qlaieh area briefly after the attack but there was no immediate further response on Saturday.

Before Israel's 17-day blitz on Lebanon last April which killed 200 people, mainly civilians, but failed to wipe out Hizbollah, the guerrillas followed a policy of firing Katyushas into Israel whenever Israeli shelling caused Lebanese civilian casualties in South Lebanon.

But Hizbollah has refrained from such attacks since the U.S.-sponsored April 26 accord.

The accord set up a monitoring group of representatives of the United States, France, Syria, Lebanon and Israel to observe the truce.

The group has three times rebuked Israel in the past three months for bombarding civilian areas and wounding civilians, and has twice said it "deplored" the Israeli actions.

On Thursday, the group said Israel was responsible for shelling two South Lebanon villages on the previous Saturday, and deplored the wounding of six civilians in the bombardment.

Some military analysts expressed surprise that the monitoring group did not criticise Israel's use of "flechette" rounds — anti-personnel shells that spray hundreds of steel darts — which according to U.N. officials are banned under the Geneva conventions.

They were also surprised that the group failed to mention that the shells were fired by a tank directly at the villages.

The Saturday shelling followed an attack by guerrillas that killed one Israeli soldier and wounded another.

The Los Angeles Times reported Saturday Iran is flying at least three 747 Jumbo cargo jets filled with supplies to Syria each month for shipment to Lebanon.

The Times, citing Pentagon and U.S. intelligence sources, said the shipments are part of an effort to upgrade the arms capabilities of Tehran's allies.

Included in the shipments, which are primarily weapons but also some humanitarian
